ABSTRACT

A guide to help families estimate college costs and their eligibility for financial aid is presented. Expenses for the 1980-81 academic year are listed for more than 3,200 two-year and four-year, public, private, and proprietary institutions. The guide also outlines the types of aid available and how to apply to federal, state, local, and private agencies that administer financial aid programs as well as to the colleges themselves. Suggestions on application procedures for self-supporting or handicapped students and for students whose parents are divorced, separated, or deceased are included. To familiarize families with the application process, the directory contains samples of the Financial Aid Form and Student Eligibility Report from the Basic Grants program, as well as a bibliography of aid sources, a glossary of educational terms, and a financial aid application checklist. Also described are the principal benefit programs, including social security, veterans' education, vocational rehabilitation, and public welfare assistance. The decision of whether to attend college and the steps to take in choosing a college are also covered. (SW)

Preface

The purpose of this book is twofold. First, it is intended to be a practical guide to financial aid for high school students and their parents. Second, it contains the College Board's annual survey, Student Expenses at Postsecondary Institutions, which was first published in 1970 and is presented here in an expanded format.

As a guide to student financial aid, The College Cost Book gives a broad overview of the college admission and financial aid process. Chapter 1 helps you decide whether college is right for you and lays out the steps to take in choosing a college. It also talks about the cost of going to college and the general principle on which financial aid is based—that you and your parents are expected to pay a reasonable share of college expenses, but, if your resources are not sufficient to meet college costs, financial aid is available to help with the remainder.

Chapter 2 describes need analysis, the process by which your and your family's financial situation is evaluated according to national guidelines. Through need analysis, colleges determine what resources can be expected from you and your family and whether you can qualify for financial aid on the basis of demonstrated need.

The major student financial aid programs—federal, state, and college—are outlined in Chapter 3. The description of each program includes an address where you can write for further information. Also described in this chapter are the principal benefit programs, including social security, veterans' education, vocational rehabilitation, and public welfare assistance. The chapter ends with a bibliography of publications about special sources of financial aid.

In Chapter 4 step-by-step assistance is provided for completing the Financial Aid Form, the document most widely used to apply for student financial aid. There is also a section on application procedures for students with special circumstances, such as self-supporting or handicapped students, or those whose parents are divorced, separated, or deceased.

Finally, a checklist is provided in Chapter 5 to help make certain you don't overlook any steps in the admission and financial aid process.

The appendix gives comprehensive data about student expenses at more than 3,200 postsecondary institutions in the United States. A brief introduction gives information helpful in interpreting the tabular data. At the end of the appendix is an alphabetic listing of all institutions for which data are provided. An address to which you can write for further information is also included for each college.

The College Cost Book was prepared by Joe Paul Case, director of program administration at the College Scholarship Service of the College Board, with major contributions by Claudia B. Schellenberg, administrative assistant. Data in the student expenses appendix were compiled by the editorial staff of The College Handbook. Statistical analyses of the data were performed by Sheila Kokidko with programming developed by Edmund C. Jacobson. The Cost Book was edited by Maureen Matheson, editor of data-based publications, and Brooke Breslow.

1. Planning for college

"The principal reason financial aid exists is to allow students the opportunity to make educational decisions based on educational– not financial– criteria."

Why college?

DECIDING to continue your education beyond high school is one of the most important decisions you will make in your life. A college education can prepare you for a career or profession; it can deepen your intellectual interests and broaden your cultural horizons; and it can help you mature personally and socially. Before you make the decision to pursue further education, however, you should be able to give a clear answer to the question "How will college or vocational training help me?" Without that answer, you may be wasting your time and money. College should be an intentional activity, not simply a means of postponing decisions about your life.

Self-evaluation: The questions to ask

Try to get a clear picture of yourself and of the opportunities and alternatives open to you. The following questions will help you organize your thinking about further education and how it fits into your plans for the future.

- What kind of student are you? Average? Above or below average? Are you strong in a certain subject?
- What are your goals? Are they realistic? Why these particular goals? Will further education be necessary or helpful?
- If you have a profession or occupation in mind, what career opportunities will exist in the future? How will this career fit into your intended life-style?
- What are your extracurricular activities—both in and outside school? How have these activities helped you grow as a person?
- What are your personal strengths? How have you used them to your benefit? How have you contributed to your school and community? Have your strengths been recognized by others through honors or awards?
- What people or circumstances have positively influenced your educational achievements? Why? How?
- Have you had academic or personal difficulties because of past circumstances, such as your home or school environment or your cultural background? Do you still have these problems? How do you intend to handle them while pursuing your educational and career goals?

If you answer these questions realistically, you should be able to identify your career or vocational goals and to assess whether your interests and aptitudes are suitable to those goals. You should then be able to make a well-informed decision about whether further education or training is right for you. If you cannot identify your goals, you may want to reconsider more thoroughly the questions just asked and discuss them with your parents and guidance counselor.

Four steps to choosing a college

Step 1. Identify colleges that match your goals

Once you have decided to continue your education, you must identify colleges that will help you reach your goals. The college you choose should offer you the best opportunity to develop your personal abilities, talents, and interests. You may already know about some colleges that offer course work in your field of interest, but to expand your list you should consult a comprehensive guide to colleges, such as The College Handbook or Index of Majors, published annually by the College Board. In the Handbook, you will find detailed descriptions of over 2,500 colleges, including information about major fields of study, student life, annual expenses, and admissions and financial aid procedures. The Index lists colleges by major fields of study offered. Both these books can help you locate many colleges that might further your educational goals.

Step 2. Narrow the list of colleges you are considering

After you have identified institutions that meet your educational requirements, you should consider other college features that are important to you. Do you want to attend a large university or a small college? Do you plan to commute to a nearby campus or go to college in another community or another region of the country? Are there special extracurricular activities that interest you? Is transportation, climate, or geographical setting important to you? What about religious affiliation? Or special services? Or facilities for the handicapped? To find out if a particular college has the characteristics you prefer, consult The College Handbook or the college's catalog, which may be available in your school library or guidance office.

When narrowing your list of colleges remember that your main focus should be on educational goals. Other factors should be secondary. Most important, do not let college costs discourage you from considering an institution that interests you. Financial aid is available at practically all colleges to students who need it. In fact, the principal reason financial aid exists is to allow students the opportunity to make educational decisions based on educational—not financial—criteria.

Step 3. Apply for admission

Admissions policies vary widely from college to college. Some institutions admit all students who meet some basic criterion, such as high school graduation. These are known as "open admissions" colleges. Other colleges have additional admissions requirements, such as high school class rank and school grade average. At many of these colleges, applicants who meet the stated requirements can count on being admitted. At some institutions, however, admission is limited to a select number of students each year. Often the most selective institutions must choose from a pool of equally qualified applicants and, because of space limitations, cannot guarantee admission to all qualified candidates.

You can get an indication of the selectivity of a particular college by reviewing information about the number of students who applied and were admitted to the college's most recent freshman class. Applicants' test scores are another indication of a college's selectivity. Most of this information is listed in the individual college descriptions in The College Handbook.

Unless you believe you are clearly not qualified for admission to a particular college, you should not drop it from your list of possible choices. If you do not meet all the requirements stated by a college in which you are interested, do not assume the college would not accept you. Write to the college about your deficiency, giving any other evidence of your qualifications that you can offer in its place.

Many students are confused about how many colleges to apply to. Unfortunately, there is no certain number of applications that is right for everyone. If you can be certain of being admitted—either because it is an open admission institution or because it guarantees admission to all students meeting its stated requirements—then you need only apply to that one college. On the other hand, if you cannot be sure of admission, then you should apply to other colleges as well. In other words, you should apply to as many colleges as you need to—to give yourself the best chance of going to a college you prefer.

During the fall of your senior year in high school you should write to each college on your list and ask for admissions materials and other information, such as financial aid application procedures. Applications for admission should be completed and returned to the colleges of your choice by the appropriate deadlines. These dates usually will be noted on the application forms or in the college catalogs. Also, find out what other documents you are required to submit—such as an official copy of your high school transcript, letters of reference, and admissions test scores—and make sure they are sent to the college before the application deadline.

Most four-year and many two-year colleges require you to take an admissions test, such as the College Board's Scholastic Aptitude Test. These tests are administered several times during the year at various test centers throughout the country. Each college's admissions information should specify the date by which test scores should be submitted. You should arrange to take the examination far enough in advance of the deadline (generally at least six weeks) to allow your scores to be reported to the college.

In addition, most colleges require an application fee, which can sometimes be waived for students from low-income backgrounds. The college's admissions materials should tell you about this possibility. After you are admitted, some institutions also require a deposit toward tuition or dormitory charges. If you are eligible for financial aid, these deposits may be waived or postponed.

Step 4. Decide which college to attend

If you are admitted by more than one college, you have a final decision to make—which college to attend? When you apply to colleges, you should identify your first, second, and third choice so that this decision will be easier. However, other factors, such as the composition of financial aid offers, must be weighed.

Many selective colleges abide by a Candidates Reply Date Agreement. This means that the colleges agree not to require you to make a college choice before May 1 of your senior year. The agreement permits you to consider carefully all offers of admission and make the choice best suited to your individual situation. Not all colleges, however, subscribe to the agreement. If a college that interests you offers you admission and presses you to respond before you have heard from another college that also interests you, you have a difficult decision. You might tell both colleges about the circumstance in which you find yourself. Perhaps the earlier college will permit a delay in your responding; or maybe the other college can give a preliminary indication of your chances for admission. Your parents or guidance counselor may also be able to help you resolve the dilemma.

The admission process may be simplified for you if you have a first-choice college and that college subscribes to the College Board's Early Decision Plan. Under this plan, colleges agree to follow a common schedule for early decision applicants. Colleges may offer either a single-choice plan or a first-choice plan. If you apply under the first-choice plan you must withdraw applications from all other colleges if you are admitted to your first-choice college. If you apply under the single-choice plan you may not apply to other colleges unless your single-choice college does not accept you. If a college follows the Early Decision Plan, admission and financial aid applications must be received by a specified date no later than November 15 of your senior year. The college, in turn, agrees to notify all early decision applicants no later than December 15. The College Handbook and Index of Majors note colleges that subscribe to the Early Decision Plan.

How not to choose a college

- Don't lose sight of your main reason for going to college. If you find several colleges that meet your most important requirements, then let other preferences help you choose.

- Don't let the choice just happen. Take charge of your planning. Don't be passive, following the lead of your friends. Don't take all the suggestions that come to you. Don't let someone else decide.
- Don't apply to colleges if you don't really intend to go to them, just to make your parents proud of you or to impress your classmates.
- Don't be fooled into believing that the harder a college is to get admitted to, the better it must be. Don't forget that no college is best for everyone and that your task is to find the one that seems best for you.
- Don't procrastinate. Don't apply to many colleges indiscriminately so you can postpone thinking about which one to attend.
- Don't second-guess the admissions decisions of colleges you want to attend. Don't avoid applying because you think you won't be accepted.
- Don't expect to find one college that is perfect in every way—the one and only best choice for you.

Choosing a college is an important undertaking that requires careful, thoughtful planning. Remember the four steps to choosing a college.

1. Identify colleges that offer course work in your field of interest.

---

2. Narrow the list of colleges you are considering by taking into account factors other than your educational objective alone.

---

3. Apply for admission after considering your prospects of being admitted.

---

4. Choose the college that best fulfills your educational objective.

How will you pay for college?

YOUR most important source of financial help is your parents. Some families of very modest means can only provide moral support, but most families can give substantial financial help. Sometimes parents have only a vague idea of how much college education costs today. Many do not know how much they will be expected to pay toward their son's or daughter's educational expenses.

Colleges, state scholarship and grant programs, and other organizations that award financial aid believe that parents have a responsibility to pay as much as they can toward their children's education costs. Aid administrators are willing to help parents meet educational expenses, but they also expect each family to contribute as much as other families in similar financial circumstances. A family is expected to draw on its current income and its accumulated assets when those assets are more than sufficient to cover the retirement needs of the parents.

Parents who seek financial help from colleges or from public or private agencies are usually asked to supply detailed information, in confidence, about their financial situation. Colleges require this information so that they can distribute limited financial aid funds to all eligible candidates. In Chapter 2 we will see how a consistent, objective method of analyzing parents' financial circumstances is used in determining the parents' obligation.

You also have an obligation to pay for your own college education. Because you are the one who gains the benefits of higher education, you are expected to assume at least part of the responsibility for paying college expenses. You can do this by working, saving, and borrowing.

Don't consider it impossible to attend college because your finances are limited. Even students who must help support their families are able to continue their education beyond high school. Jobs and loans are the most readily available kinds of financial aid, and virtually every college can either provide them or help students to locate them.

Demonstrated need: Are you eligible for financial aid?

The obligation for financing your college education first falls on you and your parents. If, despite your family's efforts, its resources fall short of paying the entire college bill, you are said to demonstrate need. Demonstrated need is the difference between the cost of attending a particular college and the amount your family can reasonably be expected to contribute towards those expenses. That is,

Total college expenses
− Family contribution
= Demonstrated need

Figure 1.
Available student aid—academic year 1979-80 (in millions)

Students are usually eligible for financial aid equal to the amount of their demonstrated need. Because what your family can afford stays the same whether college expenses are high or low, you may be eligible for different amounts of aid at different institutions. Therefore, don't rule out any college on the basis of cost alone.

Where is the money and where does it go?

Access to financial aid resources is greater now than ever before. In 1979-80 over $14 billion in financial aid was available to help students meet the costs of education or training beyond high school. This money helped millions of students continue their education. In recent years federal student financial aid programs have expanded dramatically—especially as a result of the Middle Income Student Assistance Act of 1978, which significantly extended the major federal grant and loan programs. State student aid programs have also grown rapidly in the past decade, so that now every state and territory has a program. In addition, many colleges have set aside more money for their own student financial aid programs. Figure 1 illustrates the College Scholarship Service's estimate of financial aid available during the 1979-80 academic year. Table 1 gives more detailed information about the funds available through federal, state and private programs. (The aid programs noted in Figure 1 and Table 1 are explained in Chapter 3.) The prospect is that funds will expand modestly in the years ahead.

It is difficult to comprehend what these total national figures mean. Obviously aid is available, but what do the figures mean for the individual student? That is, how does the average student pay for college?

To get an answer, we can look at data from an annual survey of freshman students published by the American Council on Education and the University of California at Los Angeles. Table 2 shows the percentage of students having a particular resource, the average resource per student, and the percentage each resource constitutes of total resources available.

The table shows that on the average a student's family contributes most towards the college bill—about 34 percent of the total. The student pays about 22 percent through savings and non-financial-aid employment. In other words, you and your family are the principal resource in paying for college. Over half the college bill is paid by students and their families. Financial aid and benefits make up the remaining 44 percent of the typical student's college resources.

2. How much will college cost? How much will you pay?

"Before the advent of major student aid programs, the family was expected to pay the entire bill. But now the family is expected to pay only what it reasonably can."

Estimating your expenses

ALTHOUGH the most important consideration in choosing a college is educational, more and more American families are concerned about costs. Middle- and upper-income families, as well as lower-income families, are finding it difficult to meet the costs of a college education. You and your parents need to plan ahead to cope with the problem of financing a college education. To do this effectively, you need information about the cost of college.

Student expense budgets

The appendix of this book lists student expense budgets at over 3,200 postsecondary institutions. A student expense budget is an all-inclusive summary of direct educational and living expenses. The budget for the typical college student is made up of five principal parts:

- tuition and fees
- books and supplies
- room and board
- personal expenses
- transportation

In determining your need for financial assistance, the college's financial aid administrator will begin by establishing a budget with these items in it. The aid administrator will then consider other expenses that may be necessary, such as medical care, debt repayment, or extra expenses resulting from a handicap. The basic five items, however, are usually included in the budgets used for all students.

Tuition and fees

Tuition is the college's charge for instruction. Fees may be charged for such services as the library, health center, student union, and so forth. Although actual instructional costs vary from one institution to another according to the curriculum, academic level, and type of educational program offered, the amount of the tuition and fees is more closely related to the kind of college you attend. As a general rule, tuition and fees at public institutions are the lowest, particularly for students who are legal residents of the state or district in which the institution is located. However, public institutions, both two-year and four-year, typically have an additional tuition charge for students who are not legal residents of the state or district. Having to pay this "out-of-state" tuition (or "out-of-district" tuition in the case of two-year community colleges) may make the cost of attending a public institution as high as or higher than attending a private institution.

Both public and private colleges generally set their tuition below the real cost of providing educational instruction, but tuition charges at private colleges usually cover a larger percentage of the real costs. For this reason tuition at private colleges is likely to be considerably higher than tuition at public institutions. Public colleges rely on taxes to help pay a part of their operating expenses. In the instance of proprietary institutions, the school normally sets its prices to cover all operating costs.

Books and supplies

Every college student has to buy books, pencils, paper, and other supplies. The amount you spend for books and supplies will vary only slightly by type of institution, but is generally related to the curriculum or courses you select. Most colleges have a campus bookstore where you can buy books and supplies. Sometimes, you can save money by buying books that have been used by other students.

Room and board

In constructing student expense budgets, most institutions make an allowance for living costs. These costs may vary depending on your choice of residence. You may choose to live in a dormitory on campus or in other college-operated housing; in privately owned housing, such as an apartment or rooming house near the campus; or at home with your parents. Students who do not live at home with their parents are usually referred to as resident students (not to be confused with the term "legal resident" used in the discussion of tuition and fees). Those living at home are called commuter students.

Colleges with on-campus housing typically have a charge for resident students that includes room rental and most meals for nine months, excluding holiday and vacation periods. The room and board charge is usually built into the student expense budget for financial aid purposes. On the other hand, commuter students generally spend less for living costs than resident students because of the absence of housing charges. Nevertheless, families should remember that they will still need to buy food for the student and pay for other normal living expenses. For example, classes may start early in the morning and go on until late at night. Commuter students may have to purchase at least one meal a day on campus and usually will spend additional amounts on snacks bought in the student union or restaurants near the campus. In considering commuter students for financial aid, the cost of food and other expenses at home are usually taken into consideration. Students and parents should also consider these costs in planning for college.

Personal expenses

Personal expenses include such items as clothing, laundry, toiletries, recreation, medical insurance, and incidental furnishings for dormitory rooms. Many students think they can economize in this area, but colleges usually estimate that resident students as well as commuter students will spend around $500 for these items.

Transportation

Almost all students must spend some money for travel. Students who reside on or near campus during the academic year must travel to get there at the start of the year and return home at the end of the year. Most resident students also go home at least once or twice during the year. For the purpose of calculating a student expense budget, most college aid administrators count the cost of two round trips home during the year. Students who live at home and commute to the campus usually have daily transportation costs whether they use public transportation or private car. At some institutions, particularly in urban areas, the cost of daily parking can be substantial.

Total expense budget

In constructing a total expense budget, the five components we have discussed are added together. Tables 3 and 4 show the average total expenses for resident and commuter students estimated for the 1980-81 academic year by the colleges and schools listed in the appendix. Student budgets at public colleges are lower because these institutions have lower tuition and fees than private colleges and proprietary schools. However, when all expenses except tuition and fees are considered, the variation in the costs of attendance is not great. The difference in tuition and fees should not prevent you from considering a private institution that interests you. Private institutions often have substantial financial aid resources that help make up the difference. Remember that the amount you and your parents are considered able to pay does not vary from college to college. Financial aid is based on demonstrated need, and need is the difference between your total expence budget and the amount that your family is able to pay toward college costs. Need, therefore, varies with the budget. That is, the greater the budget, the greater is the possibility of your demonstrating financial need.

How much will college cost you?

The first step in planning for how you will pay for college is estimating your own expenses. Use the Student expense budget worksheet on page 12 to calculate your own budget. To make an initial estimate you may want to refer to the detailed budgets reported in the appendix. These budgets are useful in early planning, but you should consult the catalog of each college that interests you when you are ready to make more definite plans.

Ways to cut college costs

In some cases your college expenses can be cut substantially through one of these methods:

Credit by examination

Many colleges grant advanced placement or credit to students who can demonstrate proficiency in college-level studies through examinations such as those sponsored by the College Board's Advanced Placement Program and College-Level Examination Program. If you get credit by examination, the number of courses required to earn a degree may be reduced. A savings in tuition costs may, therefore, be possible.

Accelerated programs

By taking course work during summer school sessions you can accelerate your degree program so that, for example, you can earn a bachelor's degree in three years instead of four. Generally there is no savings in tuition and fees, but a year's living expenses may be saved. In addition, you can enter the work force earlier than would otherwise be the case. Sometimes students take summer school courses to lighten their course load during the academic year, so that they can be employed more hours year-round.

Correspondence and home study

You can earn some college credit through direct study on your own, without attending classes. This can reduce transportation and perhaps some living expenses. Using this option can permit a student to work and save for full-time attendance later. If you are considering correspondence or home study you should investigate carefully the acceptability of credit earned in this way for transfer to college degree programs.

Cooperative education

Some colleges and businesses work together to allow students to alternate periods of full-time study with periods of full-time employment. Through cooperative programs, you gain valuable work experience related to your field of study, and earn money to help finance your education.

Credit for military or life experience

You may be able to receive college credit because of training you received in military service or as a result of tests administered by the armed forces. If you have had work experience in a certain field, you may also be eligible to receive college placement or credit on the basis of that experience. Corporations sometimes sponsor workshops, seminars, or training programs for their employees. Some colleges may grant credit for your participation in these programs.

Need analysis: How much are you able to pay?

HOW MUCH is a family expected to pay for college? The answer to that question has changed significantly over the past 25 years. Before the advent of major student aid programs, the family was expected to pay the entire bill. But now the family is expected to pay only what it reasonably can.

After estimating your college expenses, the next step in planning is estimating your family contribution. This is the second important step in evaluating whether you might qualify for financial aid. The family contribution is made up of a parents' share and a student's share. Remember, colleges and other aid sponsors believe that the responsibility for paying for college falls first on the student and his or her parents, to the extent they are able.

A method of determining how much families may be able to pay toward college costs has been devised by the College Scholarship Service. This method is called need analysis. The guidelines for need analysis have been developed by representatives of the colleges, secondary schools, and educational associations that constitute the College Board, with the advice of economists and other experts in financial aid. Because each family's situation is unique, the need analysis guidelines take into account such factors as income, assets, family size, and unusual expenses. College financial aid administrators use the need analysis guidelines in deciding how much of the cost of going to college your family can reasonably be expected to pay—and, therefore, how much financial aid you may need.

Parents' expected contribution

The most important factor in need analysis of a family's financial situation is the parents' income. Parents may have income from their own employment as well as from other sources, such as interest, dividends, or business and farm revenues, or from social security, veterans', or welfare benefits. All income from all sources is considered in need analysis.

Of course, the parents' entire income cannot be used to pay for college. Allowances are made for family living expenses—rent or mortgage payments, food, clothing, and so forth; for taxes; and for unusual expenses, such as large medical and dental bills. When both parents (or the one parent in a single-parent household) are employed, the costs of child care, commuting, and meals away from home are also considered.

After all these expenses have been deducted, the amount remaining to a family for discretionary use is quite a bit smaller than the parents' total income. In need analysis this amount is called available income—that is, income available to supplement the basic allowances made in need analysis and available to spend on goods and services, including higher education. However, as we will see shortly, only a fraction of the parents' available income is considered in the family's contribution toward college costs.

A family's assets are also taken into consideration, because a family with assets is in a stronger financial position than a family with similar income but no assets. For example, a family that has a total income of $15,000 and owns a home could, if necessary, borrow against their home. This family is in a stronger financial positon than another family with the same income but no assets. Therefore, in estimating your family contribution, net assets are considered. The net amount is calculated by subtracting the present indebtedness against each asset from the asset's present market value (that is, the amount the asset could currently be sold for). The following assets are considered in need analysis:

- home equity
- equity in other real estate
- the value of a business or farm
- cash, savings, and checking accounts
- investments

Just as your family cannot be expected to spend all its income on educational expenses, it is not expected to use up all its assets to pay for college. For example, if your family owns a business or farm, a substantial portion of the business or farm assets is excluded from consideration because they also function as a source of income.

Families accumulate assets for a variety of reasons, including retirement needs, possible emergency expenses, and future spending. Because of this, in need analysis, all families have a part of their assets reserved. This reserve is called the asset protection allowance. The allowance is larger for older parents because they have fewer years remaining before retirement than do younger parents. When this allowance is subtracted from the parents' total net assets, the portion left over is called discretionary net worth, meaning that families potentially have some leeway in determining the use of these remaining assets. However, even at this point in need analysis a family is not expected to convert these remaining assets into cash to pay for college. Only a small percentage of the parents' remaining assets is considered available. This part is called an income supplement from assets. Again, this term is not intended to imply that any assets are converted to cash. Rather, this is a mechanism widely used in social welfare economics to help measure the relative financial strength of families in terms of both their income and assets.

By adding the parents' income supplement from assets to the parents' available income we come to a dollar amount called adjusted available income. Because adjusted available income is composed of portions of both income and assets, it can be used to equate families of similar financial strength. That is, two families may have different income and asset positions—one with higher income and lower assets, the other with lower income and higher assets—but if their adjusted available incomes are equal, the families are deemed equal in their ability to contribute toward their children's college expenses.

Only a percentage of the adjusted available income is tapped for educational expenses. But a family with a higher adjusted available income is expected to pay a greater share of college costs than a family with a lower adjusted available income. The amount the parents are expected to pay from their adjusted available income is called the parents' expected contribution. If only one family member is in college, the parents' contribution is expected for that one student, but if more than one family member is in college, the parents' contribution is divided equally among all those attending.

Table 5 shows the amount that a typical family would be expected to provide towards a year of college in 1981-82 according to the College Scholarship Service. Families with sizable assets may be expected to contribute more than is shown, while other families with unusual circumstances may not be expected to contribute as much. Keep in mind that these figures are simplified results of the need analysis system, and that a college must review and evaluate each family's situation in determining the expected parents' contribution and in deciding whether to offer financial aid.

You can get a better idea of your parents' contribution by doing some computations on your own. The Parents' expected contribution worksheet on page 14 and its accompanying tables above outline the steps in need analysis we have just described. By filling in information about your family and doing the calculations, you can get a good estimate of what a college would expect your parents to be reasonably able to pay for college in 1981-82.

Student's expected contribution

Students, too, are expected to contribute toward college costs—from savings, summer earnings, and special benefits they may receive, such as social security or veterans' benefits. If you are applying for financial aid you should probably count on being expected to contribute at least $700 from summer job earnings. If you are unable to save that much money (or even to find employment), you should let the financial aid administrator know. The aid administrator may be able to accommodate this shortfall through additional loans or work opportunities during the academic year. Use the Student's expected contribution worksheet below to help calculate what you will be expected to pay.

Total family contribution and estimated financial need

Use the Total family contribution worksheet below to transfer the figures from your Parents' expected contribution worksheet (line J, or line K if there will be more than one family member in college) and from the Student's expected contribution worksheet (line L). By adding together these two figures, you can determine your total family contribution.

Are you potentially eligible for financial aid? To find out you must compare your family contribution with the cost of going to college. Use the Student need worksheet below to record the student expense budgets at the colleges that interest you. (If you completed the worksheet on Student expense budgets you can transfer the figures from line A.) Enter your total family contribution (from line M in your Total family contribution worksheet) and subtract it from each of the student expense budgets. If your family contribution is not so large as the student expense budget, you probably are eligible for financial aid equal to this estimate of your financial need.

Financial aid package

To meet your financial need—whether large or small—the financial aid administrator at the college of your choice will put together a package of financial aid resources. This is done on the basis of your need, the availability of funds, and the college's own policies. Most financial aid packages will include some of the sources discussed in Chapter 3. Colleges will do their best to help you find the combination of resources you need. Use the worksheet above to record your awards after you hear from each college.

Self-supporting students

So far the discussion has been concerned with students who are dependent on their parents for financial support. This is not the case for all students. If you are financially independent of your parents, you are called a self-supporting student by the college. This does not mean that your resources are always sufficient to pay your direct educational costs as well as living expenses for yourself and your family.

Self-supporting students must provide for their own maintenance and living costs year-round. Therefore, the living expenses of self-supporting students for 12 months are usually higher than for dependent students for an academic year (usually 9 months). Table 6 shows average 12-month costs for single, self-supporting students in 1980-81

Because self-supporting students are responsible for maintaining their own residence and may also have their own dependents, they are more likely to have higher expenses than dependent students. They may also have extra expenses, such as child care and outstanding debts that are not typical of dependent students. These added costs are usually considered in developing a student expense budget.

Specific criteria have been developed for the purpose of determining who can be considered independent or self-supporting. If you satisfy these criteria, you might not be required to supply parents' financial data when applying for financial aid. Some institutions, however, require that parents' information be supplied by all applicants seeking aid, regardless of a student's dependency status.

Most institutions consider the following factors in defining an independent student: the student's age, length of time away from the parents' home, student's status as a dependent for tax purposes, and the amount of support the student receives from parents. The definition set forth by the federal government for self-supporting students applying for aid in academic year 1981-82 states that, for the years 1980 and 1981, the applicant (1) must not live with parents more than six weeks a year; (2) must not be listed by parents as a federal income tax exemption; and (3) must not receive more than $1,000 in parental support.

If you meet these criteria, the procedure given in the Self-supporting student worksheet should be used to analyze your ability to pay college costs. A simple outline like this cannot provide the exact determination of need that a college or aid program will make, but it does give a rough estimate of what contribution you might be expected to make.

3. What you should know about financial aid

"Searching for. . .financial aid can be time consuming, but imagination, initiative, and persistence can pay off."

Financial aid programs

FINANCIAL AID programs can be categorized in several ways. One way is to differentiate between gift and self-help programs. Gift programs provide assistance with no obligation on your part for employment or future repayment. Scholarships and grants are the principal forms of gift aid. On the other hand, self-help is aid that requires your active participation, either now or sometime in the future. Loans and student employment are both forms of self-help.

Another way to identify programs is according to the source of the aid funds. Program sponsors include the federal government, state governments, colleges, and private organizations. Each of these program sponsors may have both gift and self-help forms of assistance as illustrated in Table 7.

This chapter explores the various types of financial aid resources available to you. Specific eligibility criteria for each major financial aid program are included with the description of each program. However, there are some basic eligibility requirements that apply to most of the programs discussed in this chapter. These basic criteria are reviewed below.

Eligibility criteria

Student status

To be eligible for most aid programs you must be at least a half-time student, but some programs, especially those sponsored by colleges and private organizations, may require full-time attendance. Half-time status is usually defined as six semester hours enrollment each semester (or its equivalent). Full-time enrollment is usually defined as at least 12 hours a semester.

You must also be enrolled in an eligible program in an eligible institution to have access to most federal and state funds. For federal purposes, over 6,500 colleges, universities, and vocational and technical schools qualify as eligible institutions. State programs are sometimes limited only to colleges and universities. In addition, sometimes there are restrictions on providing aid to students in certain fields of study (for example, religious studies) or in vocational or technical courses (for example, those that are shorter than six months in duration).

Certain aid programs are designed for undergraduate students only, others are for graduate students, and yet others have no limitations. Some programs are also restricted if you already have a bachelor's degree and are enrolled for study toward a second baccalaureate. Most programs require that you be in good standing with the institution and that you make satisfactory progress toward a degree or certificate.

Financial need

Most aid programs require that you demonstrate financial need. All major federal programs, except Guaranteed Student Loans, are awarded on the basis of need. State scholarship and grant programs are also generally limited in this way, although a number of states have scholarship programs that recognize academic achievement, sometimes in conjunction with financial need. State Guaranteed Student Loans are not need-based, but the limited number of state work-study programs are. Most college assistance is need-based, but some may be based on other criteria or on some mixture of need and other criteria. Aid from private sources usually has some qualifying criterion other than need, but financial need often plays a role in determining the amount of aid.

Citizenship

College-sponsored and private assistance programs usually require that aid recipients be citizens of the United States, although some programs may be especially designed for international students. State programs are normally restricted to residents of the particular state, although a few exceptions do exist—principally in loan programs. For federal student aid purposes, a student must be either a United States citizen, national, or permanent resident to receive assistance. Eligibility for federal programs is also extended to certain groups, such as refugees or persons granted political asylum. Foreign students are not eligible for federal programs.

Basic Educational Opportunity Grant Program

The Basic Educational Opportunity Grant Program (Basic Grants for short) is the largest federal student aid program that is based on financial need. It is the foundation of assistance for nearly three million undergraduate students each year. The Basic Grant program is an entitlement program, that is, all students who demonstrate need for a Basic Grant will receive one if they meet other eligibility criteria.

Basic Grant awards may range from $200 to $1,800 according to present statutes. Legislation is being considered by the Congress that may increase the grant ceilings. The actual amount you receive depends on several factors, including your need for assistance, the cost of education at the institution you attend, how long you are enrolled, and whether you are enrolled for full-time or part-time study. In addition, it should be noted that if not enough money is appropriated by the Congress for the Basic Grant program, grant amounts are reduced in accordance with an intricate formula. In these instances, students with greater eligibility are affected the least, while students with lesser eligibility are affected more.

To be eligible for a Basic Grant a student must

- show need according to a federally prescribed formula
- be an undergraduate student enrolled at least half-time in an eligible program at an eligible institution
- be a United States citizen, national, or permanent resident or meet other requirements for eligible noncitizens
- not have received a bachelor's degree previously
- not have received more than four years' worth of Basic Grants (with certain exceptions for students in five-year baccalaureate programs or students who were required to take noncredit remedial course work)

For Basic Grant purposes, eligibility on the basis of need is decided by a formula developed by the United States Department of Education and approved by the Congress. The formula considers information about you and your family similar to the information considered in need analysis. But the Basic Grant formula produces a number that is called the Student Eligibility Index. The index is used by financial aid administrators to determine your award in accordance with rules set forth by the federal government. The index is an inverse indicator of your eligibility for a Basic Grant—that is, the lower the index, the greater your eligibility.

Because the procedures for calculating a Basic Grant index are complex, lengthy, and subject to annual change, they have not been included in this book. If you are interested in learning how the calculations are performed, you can get a booklet entitled, Determination of Basic Grant Eligibility Index by writing: BEOG, PO Box 84, Washington, DC 20044.

There are several ways to apply for a Basic Grant. For the 1981-82 academic year you can use any of the following forms to apply for a Basic Grant:

- Financial Aid Form (FAF) of the College Scholarship Service (See Chapter 4 for more information.)
- Family Financial Statement (FFS) of the American College Testing Program
- Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency form (PHEAA)
- Student Aid Application for California (SAAC)
- United States Department of Education's Basic Grant Application Form

When the information on your application has been processed (usually within six weeks), you will be sent a Student Eligibility Report (SER). A sample SER is shown in Figure 2. This is your official notification of your student eligibility index. The SER will tell you whether you are eligible for a Basic Grant or whether you need to supply additional information.

Section 1 of the SER contains your eligibility index as well as other information about your application. If additional information is requested, you must provide it. In some instances certain assumptions are made in calculating your Basic Grant eligibility index. If any of the assumptions is wrong, you must correct the SER and return it for reprocessing. The SER cannot be used if information on it is incorrect.

Section 2 shows the information you reported on your application. You should review it carefully to make certain that it is correct. If you find an error, make corrections on the SER and return the form to the Basic Grant program according to the instructions on the SER.

Section 3 is to be completed by the financial aid administrator at the college of your choice. After this section is completed by the aid administrator, it will show your award at the particular institution.

Section 4 should be completed if you are asked to supply additional information in section 1 or correct information in section 2. You and others who completed the application form (your parents and/or your husband or wife) must sign this section if you make additions or corrections.

In certain cases an aid administrator must ask for information to validate your SER. Validation may necessitate your submitting such documents as a copy of your or your parents' federal income tax return (Form 1040 or 1040A), statements from the Veterans Administration or Social Security Administration, or information about the number of people in your household or the number of family members who are college students. If there are discrepancies between this documentation and your SER, you may have to submit additional information. The aid administrator may require you to correct your SER and have it reprocessed before a Basic Grant award can be made.

1. Comments

This report is a result of your form submitted to BEOG.

Your application has been selected for review and payment of a Basic Grant (BEOG) will not be made until you provide documents that verify your or your family's financial situation. You must submit this report immediately to the financial Aid Administrator at the school you plan to attend during the academic year 1980-81.

You are eligible to receive a Basic Grant (BEOG) in 1980-81. Submit all three copies of this report to the Financial Aid Office at your school now. They will calculate your grant. Based on your Eligibility Index of 1067 your Basic Grant (BEOG) award could range from 0200 to 0726, depending on the cost of education and if you attend a school for a full academic year on a full-time basis. A lower Eligibility Index results in a higher Grant.
NOTE: You must meet all eligibility requirements in order to receive your Basic Grant payment.

Some Box(es) in Section 2 have a triangle (Δ) printed after the information. This information does not affect your Basic Grant EI, but your school may want it. Do not correct the information in these boxes unless directed to do so by your Financial Aid Administrator.

If your financial situation changes dramatically between the time you apply for a Basic Grant and time you are in college, you may be able to have your Basic Grant eligibility index recalculated on the basis of your changed situation. In this case, you should file a Basic Grant Special Conditions Form. The circumstances under which you can file a Special Conditions Form are quite limited. For the 1980-81 academic year these included the following:

- Your parent or spouse earned money in 1979 but lost his or her job for at least 10 weeks in 1980.
- Your parent or spouse earned money in 1979, but has not been able to earn money as usual for at least 10 weeks in 1980, because of: (a) a disability that happened in 1979 or 1980; or (b) a loss or damage to income-producing property as a result of a natural disaster occurring in 1979 or 1980.

- You worked full time (at least 35 hours a week for a least 30 weeks) in 1979, but you are not working full time now.
- Unemployment compensation or some type of nontaxable benefit that was received in 1979 has not been received for at least 10 weeks in 1980. The nontaxable benefit must be from a public or private agency, a company, or from a person because of a court order. Nontaxable benefits include social security benefits, child support, nontaxable retirement or disability benefits, welfare benefits, and Aid to Families with Dependent Children (ADC).
- You have already applied for a Basic Grant and since then your parents (or you and your spouse) have separated or divorced.
- You have already applied for a Basic Grant and since then a parent or spouse who had income has died.

You should contact your high school guidance counselor or college financial aid administrator to obtain a Basic Grant Special Conditions Form.

Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant Program

The Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant Program (SEOG) is one of three federal campus-based programs—that is, federal funds that are allocated each year to colleges for them to use in assisting students. (The other campus-based programs are the National Direct Student Loan Program and the College Work-Study Program, which are discussed later in this chapter.)

To be eligible for SEOG, a student must meet the same student status and citizenship criteria required in the Basic Grant program. A student receiving SEOG must be an undergraduate enrolled for at least half-time study. The maximum amount of SEOG a student may receive in any academic year is $1,500, and the total for all undergraduate course work cannot exceed $4,000 (or $5,000 in a five-year undergraduate course of study). The minimum annual amount is $200. Under present legislation you must show exceptional financial need in order to qualify for SEOG. Exceptional need is defined as the student's having a total family contribution that is less than one-half the student expense budget. Pending legislation may liberalize this definition to include all students who demonstrate need.

A Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant must be matched by other kinds of aid provided through the college or through certain agencies outside the college. This means that for every dollar of SEOG you get, there must be at least one other dollar of matching assistance in your total financial aid award. It should be noted that, if student employment is used to match the SEOG award, you must earn an amount sufficient to match the SEOG. Otherwise, it may be necessary for the financial aid administrator to reduce the SEOG award accordingly.

There usually is no separate application form for SEOG. When you apply to a college for financial aid, you generally will be considered for all forms of assistance for which you might be eligible. This would include SEOG awards. If you receive an SEOG award, however, you may need to complete some additional forms, including an affadavit of educational purpose in which you affirm that the assistance you receive is used for education-related expenses. An affadavit of educational purpose is required of all students who receive federal student assistance.

National Direct Student Loan Program

The National Direct Student Loan Program (NDSL) is another campus-based federal program administered by colleges as a part of their student aid programs. Under the NDSL program undergraduate and graduate students with demonstrated need who are enrolled for at least half-time study may borrow funds to help with their educational expenses. You may borrow up to $2,500 for the first two years of college (or for a vocational or technical school program), and up to $5,000 as an undergraduate. The borrowing ceiling for graduate students is $10,000, including any NDSLs you might have had as an undergraduate.

Loans provided through the NDSL program are low-interest, deferred-payment loans. The interest rate is 3 percent and is charged only after you begin repayment. Up to that time the loan bears no interest. Repayment may be deferred while you are enrolled at least half time in a recognized postsecondary institution. Once you graduate or leave college a grace period begins. The grace period must last nine months. During the grace period no interest accrues and no repayment is required. After the grace period is over, you must repay the loan within 10 years through regular payments. The size of the payments depends on how much is borrowed, but a $30 minimum monthly payment is usually required.

In certain circumstances the repayment period may be postponed. For example, repayment may be deferred for up to three years for service in the military, Peace Corps, or VISTA. In addition, repayment can be deferred for students who resume study on a least a half-time basis even though the grace period has passed and the repayment period has begun. In these instances, however, the student does not get another grace period. In order to have repayment deferred for any of these reasons, you must complete the appropriate request form and file it with the college from which the NDSL was borrowed.

In the event of a student's death or total disability, the NDSL is canceled. In addition, portions of the loan can be forgiven because of teaching service in certain fields or in specific schools.

Students who do not repay their student loans can be referred to collection agencies by the colleges through which the money was lent. If the college is unable to collect an NDSL, the loan can also be declared in default and referred to the federal government for collection.

If you borrow through the NDSL program, you have the responsibility to notify the lending college of any change in your student status or address, as well as any change that may affect your eligibility for a deferment. You should also notify the college if you encounter difficulty in keeping up with your repayment schedule. In certain cases a college may exercise discretion in rearranging payment schedules because of unusual circumstances, such as unemployment.

As with the SEOG program, there usually is no separate application for a National Direct Student Loan. Students receiving NDSLs, however, may be required to fill out information forms, which typically request names and addresses of personal references.

If you receive a loan, you must sign a promissory note for each loan advance you get. A copy of the promissory note and other loan information should be provided to you in accordance with federal loan disclosure laws. In addition, if you borrow under the NDSL program, the college should conduct an exit interview when you leave college. During the interview, your rights and responsibilities as a borrower are reviewed and a repayment schedule is provided.

College Work-Study Program

The College Work-Study Program (CWSP) is the third campus-based federal student aid program. Under the program, colleges can provide employment opportunities to students with demonstrated need who are enrolled for at least half-time study at either the undergraduate or graduate level. Students may be employed either on campus (at nonprofit institutions) or off campus (for a public or private nonprofit organization). Generally, students are paid at least the prevailing federal minimum wage, although there are provisions in the law for colleges to pay subminimum wages in certain circumstances.

There is no ceiling on earnings under CWSP other than the limitation of your financial need. You may work as many as 40 hours a week under the program, but 10 to 15 hours a week is more typical. In assigning CWSP to you, the aid administrator normally takes into account your employable skills, class schedule, and academic progress.

Examples of on-campus jobs for students are faculty aide, library assistant, groundskeeper, dining hall worker, and office secretary. Sometimes student financial aid offices employ student workers as peer counselors who help advise other students about financial aid opportunities and procedures. In some cases a student employed under CWSP may be able to work year-round in a student-aid supported position. In such a situation the student is expected to save a sizable part of his or her summer earnings for academic year expenses. This is in addition to CWSP earnings from employment during the school year, which are to be used for educational expenses as well.

If you apply to a college for financial aid, you will usually be considered for the College Work-Study Program if you are eligible. Again, there typically is no separate application, although a student awarded a work opportunity under CWSP will be required to file a federal income tax withholding form (Form W-4) or withholding exemption form (Form W-4E—for those who will be earning less than the minimum income subject to income tax).

Other federal student aid programs

In the preceding sections we have described the principal federal student aid programs. There are several other federal programs through which you can receive assistance.

Health Education Assistance Loan Program

Under the HEAL program full-time students enrolled in certain health professions programs can obtain federally insured loans for their educational expenses. Eligible programs include medicine, osteopathy, dentistry, optometry, podiatry, veterinary medicine, graduate public health, and pharmacy. Students can borrow up to $10,000 per academic year to a total of $50,000; except pharmacy students who can borrow $7,500 per academic year to a total of $37,500. A student receiving a loan through the HEAL program cannot receive a Guaranteed Student Loan during the same academic year. HEAL loans may bear up to 12 percent interest from the time the loan is made, although repayment does not begin until nine months after the student leaves school. There are certain provisions for deferment and, in some instances, for federal repayment of portions of the loan. In general, 10 to 15 years are allowed for repayment of the loan. For more information, write: HEAL, PO Box 23033, L'Enfant Plaza, Washington, DC 20024.

Nursing Scholarship Program

The Nursing Scholarship Program provides assistance to students enrolled at least half time in programs leading to a diploma or to an associate, bachelor's, or graduate degree in nursing. Selection criteria are determined by each eligible school of nursing, with the maximum award being $2,000 an academic year. For more information write: Health Resources Administration, Bureau of Health Manpower, Division of Manpower Training Support, 3700 East-West Highway, Hyattsville, MD 20782.

Nursing Student Loan Program

This program provides loans to students in nursing and other health profession fields who are enrolled for at least half-time study at eligible institutions. The loans are limited to $2,500 an academic year to a maximum of $10,000. Repayment begins nine months after leaving school. The interest rate is 3 percent, and the period of repayment may be as much as ten years. Repayment may be deferred for up to three years of service in the military or United States Public Health Service and for up to five years for full-time advanced professional training. Portions of the loans may be canceled for service as a full-time registered nurse in a federally designated health manpower shortage area. For more information, contact your financial aid administrator or write the Health Resources Administration at the address given under the Nursing Scholarship Program above.

National Health Service Corps Scholarship Program

A limited number of scholarships is provided under this program to students intending service in a federally designated health-manpower shortage area. Eligible fields of study include nursing, medicine, osteopathy, dentistry, and public health nutrition (master's level). The scholarships require a year's service at a site designated by the National Health Service Corps for each year a scholarship is received, although the minimum service obligation is two years. During 1980-81, the scholarships provide tuition, fees, reasonable education costs, and a monthly stipend of $485. For more information write: National Health Service Corps Scholarship Program, 3700 East-West Highway, Hyattsville, MD 20782, or call toll-free (800) 638-0824. Maryland residents and persons living outside the 48 contiguous states should call (301) 436-6453 collect.

Law Enforcement Education Program

The Law Enforcement Education Program is presently limited to students who have previously had assistance under the program. Students must be enrolled in a course of study related to law enforcement. Law enforcement personnel may receive grants of up to $400 per semester or $250 per quarter, for either part-time or full-time study. Loans are available to both in-service law enforcement personnel and pre-service students for full-time attendance. Loans are limited to $1,100 per semester or $733 per quarter. Loans may be forgiven at the rate of 25 percent per year of law enforcement service. Grants require two years of law enforcement service; otherwise, they become converted to loans. For more information, contact your financial aid administrator or write: Office of Criminal Justice Education and Training, Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, U.S. Department of Justice, Washington, DC 20531.

Pending legislation may significantly alter the Law Enforcement Education Program, including possibly transferring it to the United States Department of Education.

Service academies

The United States service academies prepare both men and women for careers in the military, Merchant Marine, or Coast Guard. Students attending one of the academies have all educational expenses paid by the federal government and receive a monthly stipend as well. With the exception of the Coast Guard Academy, all appointments to the academies are made through nominations from members of Congress. If you are interested in appointment to an academy, you should contact your senator or congressional representative in the spring of your junior year. Appointments to the Coast Guard Academy are based on national competition for admission. For more information, write:

Reserve Officer Training Corps

The Reserve Officer Training Corps has over 600 units at colleges and universities across the country. Full-time undergraduate students between the ages of 17 and 25 may qualify for ROTC scholarships that will pay for tuition, fees, and books, and provide a monthly stipend of $100. Students who receive ROTC scholarships must meet certain physical and academic requirements. They also must agree to accept appointment as a commissioned officer in the military after graduation, and serve for a minimum of four years' active duty and two years' reserve duty. For more information, contact the ROTC unit at the college of your choice, or write:

Bureau of Indian Affairs

Students who have financial need and who are at least one-fourth American Indian or Alaskan Native blood quantum of a federally recognized tribe are eligible for assistance through the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA). Scholarship assistance may be used at any accredited postsecondary institution. For more information, contact your tribal education officer, your BIA Area Office, or write: Bureau of Indian Affairs, PO Box 1788, Albuquerque, NM 87103.

Guaranteed Student Loan Program

The Guaranteed Student Loan Program permits a student to borrow money for educational expenses from private sources—banks, credit unions, and savings and loan associations. In some states, a public agency also acts as a lender. In addition, some colleges participate in the program as lenders. Guaranteed Student Loans are usually insured by a state government guaranty agency or a private organization authorized by the state government. In some states, however, there is no guaranty agency, so the federal government insures the loans, which are then called Federally Insured Student Loans. Whether the state or federal government insures the loans, the program operates in the same way.

Guaranteed Student Loans are generally available to full-time students, although some states have provisions for borrowing by students who are enrolled at least half-time. Undergraduate students may borrow up to $2,500 a year to a maximum of $7,500; graduate students may borrow up to $5,000 a year to a maximum of $15,000 including any undergraduate loans. Lower limits are set in Louisiana, Oklahoma, and South Carolina. Loans are available to all students without regard to their family financial status. The interest rate is 7 percent, but the federal government pays the interest for students until they have been out of college for nine months.

Application forms are available from eligible participating lenders, from colleges, and from guaranty agencies. You complete one part of the application form. Another section must be completed by your college to certify your enrollment (or admission and prospective enrollment), academic standing, cost of education, and other financial aid. After your and the college's parts of the application are completed, it is taken (or sent) to the lender. If the lender agrees to make the loan, the form is sent to the state guaranty agency or federal government for approval. Because it normally takes four to six weeks for a Guaranteed Student Loan application to be processed, this lead time should be taken into account when arranging college finances. Loans cannot be disbursed earlier than 30 days before the beginning of an academic term.

You may encounter difficulty in finding a lender willing to make a Guaranteed Student Loan. In this instance, you should check with the college financial aid administrator. The aid administrator may be aware of active lenders. Also, in some cases the aid administrator can act in behalf of a state lending agency in either approving or recommending approval of a loan of last resort. Lenders cannot discriminate on the basis of race, sex, religion, national origin, marital status, or because an applicant receives public assistance or has exercised consumer rights. Lenders can, however, limit the number and amount of loans, and sometimes attach other requirements, such as being a customer (or having a parent who is a customer) of the lending institution.

State and state-authorized guaranty agencies can charge an insurance premium of up to 1 percent on Guaranteed Student Loans. The federal government charges a premium of one-fourth of 1 percent. The premium is usually collected by the lender at the time the loan is disbursed to you.

Guaranteed Student Loans are insured against the student's death or total disability. In addition, the state or federal guarantee made to the lender insures that the loan will be paid by the government if a student borrower defaults on repayment of the loan. Responsibility for repayment by the student is not ended by default; rather, the obligation is transferred from the original lender to the state or federal government, which will then take action to recover the loan.

Loan repayment begins between nine and twelve months after you leave college. The schedule for repayment is worked out between you and the lender. In general, you have at least five and as many as ten years to repay Guaranteed Student Loans. The duration of repayment and the amount of payments depend on the total amount borrowed. There are provisions for deferment of repayment for periods of full-time study; for up to three years for service in the military, Peace Corps, or VISTA; and for up to a year if you are unable to find employment. There are no provisions for cancellation of portions of Guaranteed Student Loans other than for death or total disability. Lenders can also exercise forbearance for students who are willing, but who are temporarily unable, to make payments and who are not otherwise eligible for a deferment. During a period of forbearance on the part of the lender, repayment may be temporarily suspended or smaller payments may be agreed upon. In either case, an extension of the repayment period is usually arranged.

For information about the Guaranteed Student Loan program, see your guidance counselor or financial aid administrator, or contact the guaranty agency listed for your state.

State scholarships and grants

Each state has a scholarship or grant program which provides financial aid to eligible students who are residents of the state. However, state aid programs are not all the same, because each state has established its own eligibility criteria. Most state programs require that you have financial need and attend a postsecondary institution within the state, although a few states do have reciprocal agreements with other states so you can receive state aid while attending college out-of-state. States may also limit the type of college that an eligible student may attend.

When applying for financial aid, be certain to consider the aid program in your state. Your high school guidance counselor or the financial aid administrators at the colleges you are considering should have information about state aid programs. If you need additional information, contact your state's scholarship or grant program.

The major state scholarship and grant programs are described in the following list. Included in the description of each program are eligibility requirements, average awards, and the address of the administrative agency. Unless otherwise indicated, funds are available to residents with financial need who are enrolled for full-time study at eligible postsecondary institutions in their state of residence.

College aid programs

In addition to the federal and state financial aid programs described earlier in this chapter, most colleges sponsor scholarships, grants-in-aid, and student employment programs. Some also offer loan programs especially for short-term or emergency purposes. Application procedures for college aid programs vary greatly. You should carefully review college financial aid information in order to determine how to apply.

Scholarships and grants-in-aid are made available from the colleges' own resources, such as endowments, and through private funds donated for student assistance purposes. Some scholarships and grants-in-aid are based on financial need. Others are awarded on the basis of personal characteristics, talents, or achievements. Often a combination of need and other criteria is used in making scholarship decisions.

Student employment programs underwritten totally from college funds usually supplement employment provided through the College Work-Study Program. College-funded programs typically are not based on financial need, but rather on special skills of the student employee. Examples of such jobs include laboratory assistant, business office aide, and dormitory resident adviser.

Short-term and emergency loans are usually available to all students. The period of repayment is normally confined to an academic year. Interest on such loans is typically quite low; sometimes there is no charge.

Deferred tuition programs, either financed through the college or by an outside commercial agency, are usually available to students and their parents. These programs allow payments for tuition and other charges to be spread over a longer period of time. College-financed programs are usually restricted to spacing payments over a period no greater than 12 months. Commercial programs, on the other hand, often allow payments for up to four years of college to be spaced out over five or more years.

Your rights and responsibilities

As you investigate financial aid possibilities, you should be mindful that pursuing your education beyond high school is an investment of your time, money, and energies. This makes you a consumer, and consumers have rights as well as responsibilities. This is just as true for student consumers as for any other kind of consumer.

The federal government has outlined what your rights and responsibilities are as a student consumer.

Student rights

You have a right to receive the following information from a college:

- What financial aid is available, including information about federal, state, and institutional programs.
- What the deadlines are for applying for each kind of aid.
- What the cost of attendance is, and what the refund policies are if you withdraw.
- What criteria the college uses to select aid recipients.
- How the college determines your financial need—including how student expenses are figured in your budget.
- What resources—such as parents' contribution, other financial aid and benefits, assets, etc.—are considered in determining your need.
- How much of your financial need has been met.
- What aid resources make up your financial aid package.
- What parts of the aid received must be repaid and what part is grant aid.
- If you receive a student loan, what the interest rate is, what the total amount is that must be repaid, what the procedures are for paying back the loan, how long you have to repay, and when repayment is to begin.
- What the procedures are for appealing a financial aid decision if you believe you have been treated unfairly.
- How the college determines whether you are making satisfactory progress, and what happens if you are not.

Student responsibilities

As a student consumer you have a responsibility to:

- Review and consider all information about a college's program before you enroll.
- Pay special attention to your application for student financial aid—including completing it accurately and submitting it on time to the right place. (Errors can delay your getting aid, and intentional misreporting of information in your application is a violation of law subject to penalties under the United States Criminal Code.)
- Return all additional documentation, verification, corrections, and/or new information requested either by the financial aid administrator or the agency to which you submit your application.

- Read and understand all forms that you are asked to sign, and keep copies of them.
- Accept responsibility for all agreements signed by you.
- If you receive a loan, notify the lender of any change in your name, address, or school status.
- If you are assigned student employment, perform in a satisfactory manner the work that is agreed upon in accepting the aid.
- Know and comply with the deadlines for applying and for reapplying for aid.
- Know and comply with your college's refund policies and procedures.

Benefit programs

THIS section discusses benefits, another kind of resource available to help pay for college. Veterans' education benefits and social security student benefits exist specifically to assist students in paying for their education. Public assistance programs, such as the Food Stamp Program and Aid to Families with Dependent Children, help people who are needy. (Although the latter two programs are not specifically designed for students, the funds provided can be considered a source of financial aid to be applied to the total cost of going to college.) Vocational rehabilitation programs help to develop skills needed by the handicapped to enter the job market.

The information provided below about benefit programs gives an overview and is by no means exhaustive. For each program you should consult the appropriate local administrative office for information about application procedures, schedules of payments, approved institutions and courses of study, and details regarding your own personal circumstances.

Veterans' education benefits

Veterans' education benefits are provided to persons who have served in the armed forces to aid in their transition from military to civilian life. The GI Bill and the Post-Vietnam Veterans' Educational Assistance Act authorize the Veterans Administration to provide this educational assistance.

GI Bill

You are entitled to education benefits under the GI Bill if you served at least 181 days of continuous active duty, any part of which occurred after January 31, 1955, and before January 1, 1977, and if you were discharged or released from the service under conditions other than dishonorable. However, if you were released from active service because of a service-connected disability and therefore did not serve for 181 days, you may still be eligible. If you were enlisted in or assigned to a reserve unit prior to January 1, 1977, but served on active duty as a result of this enlistment or assignment for at least 181 days beginning within 12 months after January 1, 1977, you are also eligible for education benefits.

The duration of benefits depends on the number of months of active duty you served. An eligible veteran with 18 or more continuous months of active duty is entitled to receive 45 months of full-time education benefits or the equivalent in part-time benefits. (Full-time enrollment is defined as 14 semester hours unless the institution certifies to the Veterans Administration that 12 hours is considered full time.) One and one-half months of full-time benefits (or the part-time equivalent) for each month of active duty are provided to eligible veterans who have served on active duty for fewer than 18 months. If you are completing the requirements for a high school diploma or equivalency certificate or taking refresher courses prior to enrollment in a program of education or training, the basic entitlement is not charged. Eligibility will cease if you do not take advantage of these benefits within 10 years of your release from active duty or by December 31, 1989, whichever is earlier.

Education benefits may be used at institutions in the United States that provide education at the elementary level and above. Included are public or private elementary and secondary schools; vocational, correspondence, business, or flight schools; colleges and universities; professional, scientific, or technical institutions; and apprenticeship programs. However, if you wish to study at an educational institution outside the United States you must enroll in a college-level or higher program to qualify for benefits. You have the right to change your program of study one time without jeopardizing your benefits, and the Veterans Administration may approve subsequent changes.

The Veterans Administration provides interest-bearing loans to veterans pursuing an instructional course on at least a half-time basis. Loans may not exceed $2,500 an academic year and are repayable beginning nine months after you cease to be enrolled at least half-time. The amount of each loan is based on financial need.

Post-Vietnam Veterans' Educational Assistance

Under this program, persons entering the service after December 31, 1976, are eligible for matching funds from the Veterans Administration at a rate of $2 for each $1 contributed by the veteran while in the service. The Department of Defense may contribute an additional amount. The veteran's contributions are limited to a total of $2,700. Matching funds are provided by the Veterans Administration until 10 years after the date of last release or discharge from active duty after January 1, 1977. Entitlement is limited to 36 months or the number of months the veteran contributed to the program, whichever is less.

Predischarge Education Program

Military personnel on active duty who wish to complete their high school education or wish to take courses needed to qualify for admission to a postsecondary program may be eligible for the Predischarge Education Program. This program entitles you to pursue courses during the last six months of your first enlistment. The basic entitlement to assistance under the Post-Vietnam Veterans' Educational Assistance Act will not be charged.

Educational assistance for dependents

The Veterans Administration will help cover the costs of educating a veteran's spouse and children if the veteran is completely disabled as a result of service-connected causes or has died while completely disabled from service-connected causes. The benefits also apply to active-duty personnel who have died as a result of service or who have been missing in action or captured in the line of duty for more than 90 days. The monthly payments are usually provided for single or married children between the ages of 18 and 26.

Social security student benefits

Funds from the Social Security Administration are provided each month to students between the ages of 18 and 22 as a result of the death, disability, or retirement of a parent (or grandparent, under certain conditions) who is entitled to social security benefits. Social security student benefits are available to you only if you are an unmarried student attending school on a full-time basis. Student benefits cease if you marry, stop attending school, or reach age 22. However, payments will continue until the end of the semester or quarter in which you turn 22 provided you have not completed the requirements for the bachelor's degree. Students attending trade or vocational school can continue receiving benefits until they complete their course or for two months after the month of their twenty-second birthday, whichever is earlier.

If you are under 18 and already receiving social security benefits, you will be notified before your eighteenth birthday of your eligibility to continue receiving payments as a full-time student. However, if you become eligible after turning 18 you will need to apply for benefits. The Social Security Administration will not notify you of your eligibility.

Student benefits are provided for full-time attendance at most high schools, vocational or trade schools, two-year and four-year colleges, and universities. Students attending schools outside the United States also may be eligible for benefits. The Social Security Administration recognizes full-time enrollment as defined by the college according to its standards for day students. Full-time high school or trade or vocational students must be enrolled in a course of study lasting at least 13 weeks and entailing at least 20 hours a week.

Benefit checks can continue during a vacation period of not more than four months if you were enrolled on a full-time basis prior to the beginning of the vacation and if you intend to return to full-time study after the vacation ends.

You should find out how your earnings or the earnings of the parent on whose record you may receive benefits affect the amount of your monthly check. You must notify the Social Security office if you marry or cease to attend school full time. The Social Security Administration requires you to provide verification of enrollment from the school twice a year.

Public assistance

Food Stamp Program

The Food Stamp Program helps low-income households buy the food needed for good health. Food stamps are coupons that are used like money to purchase food in grocery stores. Once you are determined eligible, you are certified to obtain food stamps each month at no cost. You can qualify for food stamps as a student if you meet the regular eligibility rules plus special work requirements. However, if you are 18 or older, and are enrolled at least half time in a postsecondary institution, and are claimed as a tax dependent of an ineligible household, you are not eligible for food stamps.

The Food Stamp Program has established eligibility rules in three areas: work, income, and resources. Able-bodied people between the ages of 18 and 60 must register for work, search for a job, and accept any suitable offer. Students enrolled at least half time in a recognized school, training program, or postsecondary institution are exempt from registering for full-time employment during the school year. However, they must register for 20 hours of work per week during the school year and full-time work during vacations of more than 30 days.

Certain categories of students are exempt from this work registration requirement: students already employed for a minimum of 20 hours per week or participating in the College Work-Study Program; students earning an amount equal to the federal minimum hourly wage times 20 hours per week, regardless of hours employed per week; students who are heads of households and provide more than one-half the total support of someone in the household; high school students over 18; and disabled college students.

A household eligible to receive food stamps cannot have countable resources greater than $1,750, unless the household consists of two or more persons, one of whom is at least 60 years of age. In this case, the household may have resources of $3,000. Countable resources include cash, savings, and checking accounts; stocks and bonds; and land and buildings, other than the home, not used to produce income. Some resources which are not considered countable are the home, licensed vehicles used to produce income, life insurance policies, household goods, and personal belongings.

To be eligible for food stamps, your household's net income after certain deductions must fall below the federal poverty guidelines for that size of household. Changes in the cost of living are reflected in twice-yearly adjustments to these levels. Included in the calculation of income are wages; net earnings from self-employment; public assistance; alimony received; and scholarships, education grants, fellowships, or veterans' education benefits that are not used to pay tuition and mandatory fees.

Other types of income are not counted for food stamp eligibility, including portions of education loans, grants, scholarships, and veterans' benefits used for tuition and mandatory fees; loans (except deferred repayment loans for nonmandatory education expenses); and certain kinds of income excluded by law.

The Food Stamp Program requires you to file an application and be interviewed by a food stamp worker. You must also supply documents and information to verify your eligibility for the program. If you are declared eligible, you will be certified to receive food stamps for a specific period of time, depending on the stability of circumstances in the household, but for no longer than 12 months. At the end of the certification period, you must reapply. If your circumstances change during this certification period, you must notify the Food Stamp Program within 10 days of the date of change.

Aid to Families with Dependent Children

Another source of public assistance for students is funds provided from ADC to families with minor children without adequate means of support because of the absence, death, or incapacity of a parent. Although payments formerly were provided only if the father met certain unemployment eligibility requirements, the United States Supreme Court has ruled that payments may be made if either parent is unemployed.

The amount of assistance provided to the family depends on the size of the family, and on whether there is income or resources available for support. Monthly allowances are established for all needs of the family except rent and heat, and an additional amount is allowed for the latter two items. The maximum for rent varies with the size of the family. The fuel allowance (when heat is not included in the rent) is based on costs for a geographic area, exceptionally severe weather, poor construction of the home, or poor health.

As in the Food Stamp Program, employable ADC recipients are required to accept job referrals and reasonable employment or to participate in job training.

Contact your local department of social services for more information about public assistance programs.

Vocational rehabilitation

Since 1977 the federal Rehabilitation Act has prohibited discrimination on the basis of a handicap and has provided for equal participation by the handicapped in programs and activities of postsecondary institutions receiving federal financial assistance.

A handicapped person is one who has a physical or mental impairment substantially limiting one or more of life's major activities, such as walking, seeing, hearing, speaking, learning, working, or caring for oneself. The intent of the law is to assure qualified handicapped students of access to educational programs, including financial assistance.

If you are handicapped, your eligibility for financial assistance may not be limited on the basis of your handicap, nor may less assistance be provided than is available to nonhandicapped students. Expanded opportunities for financial assistance may especially be found in the College Work-Study Program. Financial aid administrators may develop jobs specifically for handicapped students.

In addition to consulting with the aid administrator about job opportunities for the handicapped, you should contact your state vocational rehabilitation agency. These agencies are working in conjunction with state associations of student financial aid administrators to develop cooperative agreements about financial aid and other assistance for handicapped students enrolled in postsecondary institutions.

In developing the aid package for a handicapped student, the aid administrator will consider the amount of assistance and type of services provided by the vocational rehabilitation agency. Expenditures included in a handicapped student's budget may include special equipment related to the disability; noninsured, nonroutine medical expenses resulting from the disability; expenses related to human assistants and attendants; and special equipment and transportation necessary to allow the student to pursue his or her academic program.

Rehabilitation is an individualized process, and rarely are two cases the same. Services must be tailored to the needs of the handicapped person. For information about assistance programs, contact your state department of vocational rehabilitation.

Other aid sources

THE earlier part of this chapter describes the major sources of financial aid. However, if you need further financial help to bridge the gap between your family's resources and the cost of attending the college of your choice, you should consider special aid sources.

There are many public and private, local, state, and national programs that offer scholarships, grants, and loans to thousands of students. One major program, the National Merit Scholarship Program, awards about $11 million each year to approximately 4,000 students. High school juniors compete for these awards by taking the Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test/National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test (PSAT/NMSQT) in October at one of the more than 17,000 high school test centers around the country. A second program, the Century III Leaders Program, is cosponsored by the National Honor Society and the National Association of Secondary School Principals. The program annually awards over 200 scholarships, each worth $1,000, to National Honor Society members for use in their first year of full-time attendance at accredited colleges.

The eligibility requirements and application procedures for special aid programs often differ, as do the number of awards given annually and the average size of the awards. Some programs consider financial need, while others do not. Some consider need and other criteria. You might qualify because of your:

- academic achievement
- religious affiliation
- ethnic or racial heritage
- community activities
- artistic talents
- athletic ability
- career plan, field of study
- hobbies, special interests
- parents' employer or union membership
- parents' membership in civic or fraternal group

To obtain information about other special programs:

Check with your high school guidance counselor, and periodically look for notices on your school bulletin board.

---

Find out if your parents' employers, labor unions, or professional associations sponsor student aid programs.

---

If you are not yet a senior, read your hometown newspapers (especially in April, May, and June) for the names of scholarships given to graduating seniors. If you think you might qualify, check with the scholarship sponsor.

---

Contact local civic and fraternal organizations, religious groups, and veterans' posts. Local groups, or their state or national units, often sponsor scholarship programs—especially for members' children. Also investigate programs that may be underwritten by local businesses or industries. Community-based Educational Opportunity and Upward Bound Programs may also be of help in locating aid.

Bibliography of aid sources

SEARCHING for special sources of financial aid can be time consuming, but imagination, initiative, and persistence can pay off. When looking for aid sources, ask the persons and organizations you contact if they can recommend at least one other resource. This step in your financial planning can produce positive results. Give yourself the best possible chance of getting funds from these sources by starting your search now.

4. How to apply for financial aid

"Application procedures vary from college to college.... Make sure that you know what form to file and the deadline by which to file it."

Applying for aid

TO GET financial aid for college, you must apply for it. You should apply for aid when you apply for admission. Application procedures vary from college to college, but most institutions (and state and private scholarship programs) will ask you to complete a need analysis form, such as the College Scholarship Service's Financial Aid Form (FAF) or the American College Testing Program's Family Financial Statement (FFS). You should check with each college and program to make sure that you know what form to file and the deadline by which to file it. In some cases you must also complete an institutional application. You should file the need analysis form as soon as possible after January 1 in order to be considered for financial aid for the following fall academic term. File your form at least four weeks before the earliest deadline you need to meet.

Detailed instructions accompany the need analysis form. Your parents should refer to their income tax return and other financial records in completing the form. To prevent processing delays, fill out the form completely and accurately. Do not leave any items blank; if an answer is zero, enter zero. Colleges may request a copy of your parents' tax return to verify the information reported. Inaccurate information may jeopardize your getting financial aid. What you report on the need analysis form is confidential. The form is sent only to the colleges and programs you list.

After you submit a completed need analysis form, it is analyzed and a preliminary estimate is made of what your family could be expected to contribute toward college expenses. The processing agency prints this information on a need analysis report, which is sent to the colleges and programs that you designate on your need analysis form. If you indicate on the form that you also want to apply for a Basic Grant, information will be sent to this federal program as well. At about the same time, you will receive an acknowledgment to indicate that processing has been completed. You should review the acknowledgment to make certain that all the colleges and programs to which you are applying receive a copy of your need analysis form and the need analysis report. You can also use this acknowledgment to add other colleges and programs to your original list.

In time you should receive award notices from the colleges to which you applied, as well as from your state scholarship or grant program and the Basic Grant program, if you also applied to them. Review all communications carefully, and promptly supply any additional information that may be requested.

There is a fee for processing your need analysis form. The fee covers the cost of analyzing your form and sending a copy of it and the need analysis report to the colleges and programs you list. There is, however, no charge for using a need analysis form to apply for a Basic Grant.

Financial Aid Form

THE NEED analysis form completed by the majority of students is the College Scholarship Service's Financial Aid Form (FAF). The FAF can be used by both dependent and self-supporting students at the undergraduate, graduate, and professional school levels. FAFs may be obtained from high school guidance offices and college financial aid offices. Because the FAF is accepted, preferred, or required by most postsecondary institutions, state agencies, and scholarship programs, families that file an FAF usually will not be required to complete another need analysis form. Some colleges also ask students to complete the FAF Supplement in addition to the FAF. The FAF Supplement, which is printed on the back of the FAF, asks for additional information that is helpful to aid administrators in evaluating a student's particular situation, especially if there are unusual circumstances.

You can use the FAF to apply for aid from colleges, state scholarship and grant programs, and the Basic Grant program. In the following states the FAF can be used to apply for a state scholarship or grant:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Alaska | Maryland | Oregon |
| Connecticut | Massachusetts | Rhode Island |
| Florida | Michigan | South Carolina |
| Georgia | Missouri | Tennessee |
| Hawaii | Montana | Utah |
| Idaho | New Hampshire | Virginia |
| Indiana | New Jersey | Washington |
| Iowa | New Mexico | West Virginia |
| Kentucky | North Carolina | Wisconsin |
| Maine | Oklahoma | Wyoming |

All these states—except Alaska, Connecticut, Utah, and Wyoming—have special state-specific versions of the FAF. In the other states you can simply use the national version of the FAF. California has a form called the Student Aid Application for California (SAAC), which can be filed with the College Scholarship Service and processed in the same way as the FAF. Illinois has a special version of the FAF for institutional, but not state agency, use. You should file the FAF of your home state. If there is no special version for your home state, file the national version. You can file any state-specific version of the FAF as a substitute for the national version.

A copy of the 1981-82 Financial Aid Form is shown in Figure 3 (see pages 50 and 51). The following may help answer questions you have about completing the FAF.

Completing the FAF

Because the FAF asks about your family's financial situation, it is helpful to have these records on hand when completing the form:

- federal income tax returns (IRS Form 1040 or 1040A)
- W-2 forms and other earnings records
- current bank statements
- current mortgage information
- records of medical and dental bills
- business or farm records
- records of veterans' benefits and social security payments

The FAF instructions and the commentary that follows will answer most questions you have. However, if you need more help, contact your high school guidance counselor or college financial aid administrator.

Section A. Student's information. This section asks for gereral identification and descriptive information.

1. Student's name. Give your full legal name. Do not use a nickname.

2. Student's permanent mailing address. This is usually your parents' address. Because mail regarding your financial aid application will be coming to this address, make certain it is legible and correct. If you move after submitting the form, let the colleges and programs to which you apply know your new address.

3. Student's social security number. This number is required for identification purposes.

4. Student's date of birth. This identifying information is used in determining eligibility for certain benefits and in the need analysis of self-supporting students.

5. Student's state of legal residence. This information is helpful in determining in-state (or out-of-state) tuition status at public institutions.

6. Student's citizenship status. If you are not a United States citizen, you should carefully read the FAF instructions regarding eligibility for noncitizens for federal student financial aid. Foreign students in the United States on a temporary basis are not eligible for federal assistance programs.

7. Student's marital status. You should check the box that indicates your present marital status. If you are divorced, separated, or widowed, the financial information you give in later parts of the FAF should be only for yourself.

8. Student's year in college. Check the box that is appropriate for you.

9. Previous bachelor's degree. This question is asked especially for the Basic Grant program. Basic Grants are available only to undergraduate students who have not previously received a bachelor's degree.

Section B. Student's status. The questions in this section determine whether you are considered dependent on your parents or independent of their support (that is, whether you are "self-supporting"). Self-supporting students do not have to supply parents' information; dependent students must.

The three questions are:

10. Did or will the student live with the parents for more than six weeks in 1980 or in 1981?

11. Did or will the parents claim the student as an income tax exemption in 1980 or in 1981?

12. Did or will the student get more than $1,000 worth of support from the parents in 1980 or in 1981?

If you answer "yes" to one or more of these questions, your parents' information must be reported in the color-shaded parts of the FAF, regardless of your present relationship with them. (There are a few exceptions, which are discussed later in this chapter.) If you answer "no" to all the questions in Section B you are considered self-supporting and should complete the gray-shaded parts of the FAF with information about yourself (and, if married, your spouse).

For this section, the term parents means only your natural or adoptive mother or father. No one else is included in the definition for this section. If your natural or adoptive parents are divorced or separated, the questions should be answered regarding the parent with whom you live (or last lived) for most of the year.

Section C. Household information. The questions in this section help describe the family's situation in terms of the number of persons dependent on the income and assets that are reported later in the form.

For Sections C, D, and E, the term parents includes your natural or adoptive parents if they are married to each other. If they are separated or divorced, however, only the parent with whom you live (or last lived) for most of the year is included in the definition. If that parent has remarried (or if a widowed parent has remarried), your stepparent is included in the parents definition for Section C, D, and E, if either (1) you lived with or will live with your stepparent (and parent) for more than six weeks in 1980 or in 1981; or (2) you received or will receive more than $1,000 in support from your stepparent in 1980 or in 1981.

13. Parents' current marital status. Check the box that indicates your parents' current marital status. If your natural or adoptive parents are divorced, and the parent you live with has remarried, you should check the "married" box.

14. Parents' state of legal residence. This information is used in determining certain allowances in need analysis.

15. Age of older parent. This information is also used in need analysis. The "asset protection allowance" is based on the older parent's age.

16. Parents' household size. This number should include your parents and all dependent children (including yourself, even if you do not live at home). Other persons (such as grandparents) who receive at least one-half their support from the parents may also be included.

17. Number in college (parents' household). This number should include those persons reported in question 16 who will be enrolled in college for at least half-time study between July 1, 1981, and June 30, 1982.

18. Self-supporting student's (and spouse's) household size. This number should include you, your spouse (if married), and your dependent children. Other persons who receive at least one-half their support from you (and your spouse) may also be included.

19. Number in college (self-supporting student's household). This number should include those persons reported in question 18 who will be enrolled in college for at least half-time study between July 1, 1981, and June 30, 1982.

Section D. Income and expense information. The questions in this section are very important in determining your eligibility for financial aid. Make certain that your answers are complete and accurate.

20. U.S. income tax return filed? If your parents (or you, if you are self-supporting) will file or have filed a 1980 United States income tax return, check "yes." Questions 21 through 25 should then be answered by referring to the tax return. If the answer to question 20 is "no," skip to question 26 and leave questions 21 through 25 blank.

21. Actual or estimated tax return figures. Check the box that indicates whether the answers for questions 22 through 25 are taken from a completed federal income tax return or are estimated. If you estimate your answers, you should do so with great care. Your answers should correspond to the figures you will later report on your tax return.

22. Number of exemptions. This number should be reported as it appears (or will appear) on your parents' (or your) federal income tax return.

23. Adjusted gross income. The figure asked for should be taken from your parents' (or your) income tax return. For most families "adjusted gross income" is their total income from taxable sources. Only the "adjustments to income" allowed by the Internal Revenue Service should be subtracted from gross income to derive this figure. The following worksheet may help you calculate your adjusted gross income.

|---|---|
| A. Earnings from employment | $_____ |
| B. Interest income | +_____ |
| C. Dividends | +_____ |
| D. Other taxable income (for example, income from a business or farm, rental income, royalties, etc.) | +$_____ |
| E. Total taxable income (Add A, B, C, and D.) | =$_____ |
| F. IRS-allowed adjustments to income (employee business expenses, alimony paid, moving expenses, Keogh or IRA payments, forfeited interest, and disability income exclusion) | −_____ |
| G. Adjusted gross income (Subtract F from E.) | =$_____ |

24. U.S. income tax paid. The amount to be entered here is the federal income tax paid (or to be paid) for 1980. It is not the amount of taxes withheld from wages. Refer to your parents' (or your) income tax return to find the figure requested.

25. Itemized deductions. If your parents (or you) itemized or will itemize deductions on the income tax return for 1980, the total amount should be entered here. Refer to IRS Form 1040, Schedule A, to find the figure requested.

26. Earnings from employment. In general, this question refers to wages, salaries, and tips, and income from a business or farm. The amount to be entered usually can be taken from your parents' (or your) income tax return or W-2 form. However, if your parents (or you) had income lower than the level that is subject to taxation or if there was income earned overseas, these amounts should be included in the figures you enter.

27a. Social security benefits. If you are dependent on your parents, your answer should include any benefits you and your parents receive, including benefits your parents receive for children under age 18. However, do not include benefits received by other family members (such as grandparents) or your brothers or sisters who are 18 or older.

If you are independent of your parents, include any benefits you receive for yourself or for your children.

27b. Aid to Families with Dependent Children (ADC). Report your parents' (or your) total annual ADC benefits.

27c. Other nontaxable income. This item includes all other sources of income your parents (or you) have. These include the following:

- child support
- welfare benefits (other than ADC)
- unemployment compensation (excluding amounts reported in adjusted gross income)
- veterans' benefits, excluding education benefits (Include Death Pension and Dependency and Indemnity Compensation benefits.)
- interest on tax-free bonds
- untaxed portions of pensions and capital gains
- living and housing allowances for military, clergy, and others (Include cash payments or cash value of benefits.)
- earnings from work that are not reported on a federal income tax return
- any other income not reported elsewhere on the FAF

28. Medical and dental expenses not paid by insurance. The amount asked for should reflect all medical and dental expenses incurred during 1980 that were not covered by insurance. If your parent (or you) itemize deductions for tax purposes, the amount can be taken from IRS Form 1040, Schedule A. Note that insurance premiums should not be included.

29. Elementary and secondary schooling expenses. Your parents (or you) should include in this item the amount of elementary, junior high, and senior high school tuition paid for dependent children during 1980. Amounts paid for your tuition should not be included, nor should any amounts covered by scholarships.

30. Parents' estimated income for 1981. Enter your best estimate of your parents' total income—from both taxable and nontaxable sources—in 1981. (If your parents' income will change significantly, you may want to explain the reason for this in the blank space provided in the FAF Supplement on the back of the FAF.) Self-supporting students should skip this question and the two that follow.

31. Dependent student's (and spouse's) income after taxes. If you are dependent on your parents, you should enter your (and, if you are married, your spouse's) total income from all sources in 1980. You should exclude taxes from the amount you enter. A worksheet is provided in the FAF instructions to help you calculate this entry.

32. Dependent student's (and spouse's) savings and net assets. If you are dependent on your parents, you should enter your (and, if you are married, your spouse's) total net assets. Most dependent students only have assets in the form of cash, savings, and checking accounts; however, if you have other assets (a home of your own, other real estate, investments, trust funds, or a business or farm), the net value of these assets should also be included. A worksheet is included in the FAF instructions to help you calculate your entry.

Section E. Asset Information. This section asks your parents (or you) to give your best estimate of the present market value of several kinds of assets, as well as the current debt against them. When you report an asset's worth, it should be the amount for which the asset could presently be sold, not its assessed value or original price.

33. Cash, savings, and checking accounts. Report the amount currently on hand.

34. Home—present worth and amount owed. Home value is the present market value of the home, not the assessed value or original purchase price. The amount owed on the home should include all unpaid mortgages, as well as unpaid home improvement loans and any other loans for which the home is used as collateral. Total interest on the mortgage should not be included.

35. Other real estate and investments—present worth and amount owed. These figures should include the present value of all stocks, bonds, securities, and commodities, as well as real estate other than the home; and the debt against any of these assets. Trust funds should be reported even though they may presently be legally inaccessible. Personal debts or consumer debts cannot be included in this or other questions in Section E.

36. Business and farm—present worth and amount owed. The amount reported as business and farm worth should be your parents' (or your) share of the current market value of all property used in the operation of the business or farm. This includes land, buildings, inventories, machinery and other equipment; patents, copyrights, franchise rights; livestock, and crops in storage. Debts reported should include your parents' (or your) share of unpaid mortgages, improvement loans, and debts for which the business or farm is used as collateral.

Section F. Student's (and spouse's) estimated income. All students complete this section. This section collects information about the period of time that the student is prospectively a financial aid recipient. It is important that you give your best estimates of the resources you will have during that period.

37. Student's social security benefits. You should enter the monthly amount of benefits you expect to receive and the number of months you will receive them. Benefits for other family members should not be included here. If your spouse will receive benefits, report them in question 39, "Other nontaxable income."

38. Veterans' educational benefits. You should include here only benefits you will receive from the GI Bill and Dependents Educational Assistance Programs. Any other veterans' benefits should be included in question 39, "Other nontaxable income." Report the monthly amount of your benefits and the number of months you will receive them.

39. Student's (and spouse's) other nontaxable income. Report all other nontaxable income you and your spouse will prospectively receive. You should include the following:

- child support
- welfare benefits
- unemployment compensation (Do not include any amount that you report in questions 40a or 40b, "Taxable income.")
- spouse's social security benefits
- veterans' benefits not included in question 38 (Do not include any new VA Contributory Benefits.)
- interest on tax-free bonds
- untaxed portions of pensions and capital gains
- living and housing allowances for military, clergy, and others (Include cash payments or cash value of benefits.)
- any other income not reported elsewhere that is not subject to income tax

40a. Student's taxable income. You should estimate your earnings from employment (excluding any student financial aid earnings), as well as any other taxable income (such as interest or dividends) that you will have during the summer and academic year periods indicated.

40b. Student's spouse's taxable income. If you are married, you should also estimate your husband's or wife's total taxable income (excluding financial aid) for the periods shown.

Section G. Other information and signatures. All students must complete this section.

41. Authorization. You should check the box that indicates where you want information from your FAF sent. Most colleges and scholarship programs require you to apply for a Basic Grant as a part of their considering you for financial aid. Most students therefore check box 1, which authorizes the College Scholarship Service to send information from your FAF to the Basic Grant program as well as the colleges and programs you list in question 42. If you want your FAF sent only to colleges and other programs, check box 3. If you want to apply only for a Basic Grant, check box 2.

42. Colleges and programs. List the colleges and other financial aid programs to which you want your FAF sent. Do not list the Basic Grant program.

If you are applying only for a Basic Grant (question 41, box 2 is checked), you can list two colleges in this item for Basic Grant information purposes only. (Copies of your FAF or its analysis will not be sent to the colleges.)

43. Fee. If you ask that your FAF and its analysis be sent to colleges or other programs (question 41, box 1 or box 3 is checked), a fee is required before your form can be processed. When you mail your completed FAF, make certain that you include your check or money order for the correct amount. Forms received without fees cause delays in processing.

In this item you can request that the College Scholarship Service send you a "Report of Estimated Contribution" for an additional $1 charge. The Report will tell you the College Scholarship Service's preliminary estimate of your family contribution. An interpretive guide accompanies the Report.

44. Basic Grant authorization. If you answer "yes" to the two parts of this question, you give the Basic Grant program authority to send information from your FAF (and any later changes) to (a) your state financial aid agency and/or (b) the first two colleges you list in question 42.

You should know that all state agencies and most colleges that use the FAF require that you have a College Scholarship Service analysis of your information sent to them. Answering "yes" to questions 44a and 44b will not, in most cases, meet agency and college application requirements. Normally, you must also ask CSS to send its analysis to the state agency and colleges. (See question 41.)

Certification. You must sign this form. If you are dependent on your parents, at least one parent must also sign the form. If you are married, your husband or wife must also sign. No part of the certification can be modified or crossed out. Unless all persons for whom financial information is reported sign the certification, the Basic Grant program will not calculate an eligibility index for you.

In the following limited circumstances a guidance counselor or financial aid administrator may sign the certification in place of a parent:

- the parents are not currently in the United States
- the parents' whereabouts are unknown
- the parent has been determined physically or mentally unable to provide a signature

There are no other exceptions.

Special circumstances

Standard need analysis procedures are readily applicable to most students seeking aid. Most students are single, dependent children from two-parent families. However, some students who apply for financial aid do not fall into this pattern. In some cases procedures have been established for handling unusual circumstances; in other instances, a student's special problem will require individual consideration by the financial aid administrator. Some of these special circumstances are discussed here.

Death. If your parent dies before you fill out the Financial Aid Form, you should report only the income of your living parent, even though your deceased parent may have had income that would otherwise have been reported.

If both of your parents have died, you are automatically considered self-supporting. You should answer FAF questions 10, 11, and 12 "no" for both 1980 and 1981, and follow the instructions for reporting your (and your spouse's) own information.

If both your parents die, or a remaining parent dies, after you file the FAF, you should inform the colleges and programs to which you applied of this occurrence. You should also file a Basic Grant Special Conditions Form. (See the section on "Basic Grants" in Chapter 4.)

If your husband or wife dies before you complete the FAF, your spouse's income should not be reported. If your spouse dies after you file the FAF, you should inform the colleges and programs to which you had your FAF sent. You should also file a Basic Grant Special Conditions Form.

Divorce or separation. If your parents divorce or separate before your FAF is filed, you should report only the information for the parent with whom you lived more during the 12 months preceding filling out the form. If you did not live with either parent or lived with each parent an equal number of days, information about the parent who provided more support should be reported. Support includes cash, food, clothing, housing, medical and dental care, college costs, and so forth.

If your parents divorce or separate after filing the FAF, you should inform the colleges and programs to which you had the form sent. You should also file a Basic Grant Special Conditions Form.

If you and your spouse divorce or separate before you file an FAF, you should report information only about yourself. If you divorce or separate after filing the FAF, you should inform the colleges and programs to which you applied and you should file a Basic Grant Special Conditions Form.

Remarriage. If your parent remarries, your stepparent's information must be reported on the FAF (together with your parent's information) under certain circumstances. See the discussion under Section C in "Completing the FAF."

If you remarry before filing an FAF your spouse's information must be included in the form. If you remarry after filing, you should contact the colleges and programs to which you applied and revise your FAF.

Ward of the court or state. If you are legally removed from the custody of your parents you are considered self-supporting for financial aid purposes. You should answer "no" to all question in Section B of the FAF.

Guardians or foster parents. Guardians and foster parents are not included in the definition of parent for financial aid purposes. Financial information about them should not be included in the FAF.

Parents refuse to provide information. In order to be considered for most financial aid, you must file a need analysis form. However, aid administrators will sometimes consider special circumstances if these are documented by your guidance counselor, a social worker, or a member of the clergy. You must realize that resources will be limited, because no state or federal funds can be distributed without documented financial need.

Unusual expenses or debts. In the FAF Supplement you and your parents have the opportunity to provide information about unusual expenses, debts, or special circumstances that may affect your family's ability to pay for college costs. Aid administrators review this information to see whether the situation should be accommodated in analyzing your financial need. Here are some unusual expenses and debts that are sometimes allowed:

- alimony—past due
- casualty and theft losses
- cemetery lots (at the time of need)
- child support expenses—current and past due
- funeral expenses—current and past
- legal fees—current and past
- medical and dental expenses—past
- moving expense, if job-related and unreimbursed—past
- past business debts—if the business dissolved and your parents (or you) are personally responsible for repayment
- sewer, street, and water assessment—installation only—current and past
- termite control, including repair of damage—current and past
- uninsured natural disaster (flood, fire, storm, etc.)—past
- unusual medical expenses—past (orthodontic, psychiatric, special schooling for physically or mentally handicapped children, nursing home care)

Handicap. Students with handicaps, especially ones that impose physical limitations, may have special needs that should be reflected in student expense budgets. For example, a student may have special requirements not accommodated in a standard budget, such as costs for an interpreter, reader, or personal attendant. Likewise, there may be atypical expenses that are otherwise included, such as extraordinary medical or transportation costs. If you have a handicap, you should indicate this in the "Special circumstances" section of the FAF Supplement. You may also want to contact the aid administrator directly to let him or her know of your needs, so that the aid administrator can judge whether a special budget is warranted and what costs should be allowed.

Independent or self-supporting students. Students who are independent of their parents' support—especially older students—have special needs that may cause them to rely on financial aid to help with their education and living costs. Oftentimes student expense budgets and financial aid awards have to be individually tailored for self-supporting students. However, because aid resources are usually limited, not all needs may be met. Nevertheless, independent students should not be reluctant to seek the assistance and counsel of the financial aid administrator if they encounter financial difficulties.

5. What to do and when to do it: A checklist

"If you think you need financial aid for college, your chances of getting it are best if you apply in the right way at the right time."

Financial aid checklist

OVER 11 million students are enrolled in postsecondary institutions in the United States, and it is estimated that over seven million have financial aid and student benefits to help pay college costs. If you think you need financial aid for college, your chances of getting it are best if you apply in the right way at the right time.

This checklist may help you on your way.

✔ Develop a list of colleges that interest you and that seem most appropriate to your educational and career goals. You may want to use a comprehensive guide, such as The College Handbook or Index of Majors, to help you do this.

✔ Write to the admissions office at each college on your list for an admissions application form. Remember also to inquire about financial aid opportunities and application procedures. It is best to do this early in the fall of your senior year of high school.

✔ Make certain you know what need analysis form to file. The two most commonly used forms are the Financial Aid Form (FAF) of the College Scholarship Service and the Family Financial Statement (FFS) of the American College Testing Program. You can get one of these forms from your high school guidance office or a college financial aid office. The documents are generally first available in November, but they should not be filed until after January 1.

✔ Mail your completed need analysis form as soon after January 1 as possible. The form should be sent for processing at least four weeks before the earliest financial aid deadline set by the colleges or state scholarship or grant program to which you are applying (but no earlier than January 1). Carefully follow the instructions for filling out the form. Make sure your answers are complete and correct.

✔ Apply for a Basic Grant. You can use the FAF or FFS to apply for this important federal program simply by checking the appropriate box on the form. There is no extra fee for this service.

✔ Apply for a state scholarship or grant. In many states your need analysis form can also be used to apply for state aid. Your guidance counselor should know whether you can apply in this way or whether you must fill out additional application forms. Find this out well in advance and make certain you file the appropriate forms by the deadlines.

✔ Supply additional information promptly. If you or your parents receive requests for additional information about your need analysis form, respond promptly so that there will be no further delay in processing your request for aid.

✔ Review the acknowledgment you get back. After submitting your need analysis form, you will receive an acknowledgment listing the colleges and programs you indicated should receive information from your need analysis form. Make certain that all entries on the acknowledgment are correct.

✔ Review your award letters carefully. The director of financial aid at each college and scholarship program is responsible for determining a student's need, knowing which funds a student is eligible for, and making a decision about who will receive financial aid and how much. Once that decision is made, you will receive an award letter describing the contents of your financial aid package and outlining any conditions attached to the award.

✔ Check to see if other financial aid application forms are required by the colleges to which you are applying and find out the deadline dates for each. Complete these forms as early as possible.

✔ Check with your guidance counselor, high school library, and public library for books and pamphlets about other aid sources. Follow the directions for applying. You may be qualified for a private scholarship, grant, or loan program because of your:

- academic achievement
- religious affiliation
- ethnic or racial heritage
- community activities
- hobbies or special interests
- organizational memberships
- artistic talents, athletic abilities, or other special skills
- career plans or proposed field of study

✔ Find out if your parents' employers, professional associations, or labor unions sponsor any aid programs.

✔ Investigate community organizations and civic, cultural, and fraternal groups to see if they sponsor scholarship programs at the local, state, or national level. Also check with local religious organizations, veterans' posts, businesses, and industries.

✔ If either parent is a military veteran, you may be eligible for special assistance. Contact the nearest office of the Veterans Administration for information.

✔ Contact the Social Security Administration to find out if you are eligible for education benefits from the Social Security Administration if either parent is deceased, disabled, or retired.

✔ Ask about benefits from vocational rehabilitation or other social service agencies if you think you qualify for assistance.

✔ Pay close attention to award notices from state aid programs and the Basic Grant program. Forward a copy of your Basic Grant Student Eligibility Report to the colleges to which you are applying so that they can take this award into consideration in putting together a financial aid package for you.

✔ Learn how the payments from each aid source will be made. Generally, payment of financial aid awards is made at the time you actually enroll. Also find out if there are additional procedures you should tend to or forms you must fill out in order to receive aid.

✔ Explore alternatives. If the college of your choice cannot provide you with enough aid to meet your full financial need, or your family cannot contribute what is expected of it, you may want to consider borrowing. If so, educate yourself about loans. Learn about interest rates, repayment schedules, and other terms and conditions related to loans—before you apply. Government-sponsored loans, such as the Guaranteed Student Loan Program, usually have the lowest interest rates and most flexible repayment arrangements. If you do apply for a Guaranteed Student Loan, give yourself enough lead time in having the loan papers processed—usually at least six weeks.

✔ Make a decision about which college to attend on the basis of your education and career goals. Remember to notify the college whose offer you are accepting, and to communicate your decision to other colleges so that the financial aid they reserved for you can be freed for other applicants.

Glossary

THE definitions given here of terms commonly used by colleges to describe their programs, admissions procedures, and financial aid policies are necessarily general. Students should consult the catalogs of specific colleges and financial aid programs to get more detailed and up-to-date descriptions of the following.

Accelerated program. A college program of study completed in less time than is usually required, most often by attending in summer or by carrying extra courses during the regular academic terms. Completion of a bachelor's degree program in three years is an example of acceleration.

ACT. See American College Testing Program Assessment.

Admissions tests. See Scholastic Aptitude Test and American College Testing Program Assessment.

Advanced placement. Admission or assignment of a freshman to an advanced course in a certain subject on the basis of evidence that the student has already completed the equivalent of the college's freshman course in that subject. In some cases the college also grants academic credit for the college-level work that has been completed. See also Advanced Placement Program.

Advanced Placement Program (APP). A service of the College Board that provides high schools with course descriptions in college subjects and Advanced Placement Examinations in those subjects. High schools administer the examinations to qualified students, and several hundred participating colleges offer advanced placement, college credit, or both to students who obtain satisfactory grades. See also Advanced placement.

Aid package. See Financial aid package.

American College Testing Program Assessment (ACT). Test battery of the American College Testing Program, given at test centers in the United States and other countries on specified dates throughout the year. It includes tests in English usage, mathematics usage, social studies reading, and natural sciences reading.

APP. See Advanced Placement Program.

Award letter. See Financial aid award letter.

Bachelor's degree. The degree given for completing undergraduate college programs that normally take four years. Also called the baccalaureate degree.

Basic Educational Opportunity Grant Program (Basic Grants, BEOG). A federally sponsored and administered program that provides grants based on need to undergraduate students. Congress annually sets the dollar range of Basic Grants. The grants cannot exceed $1,800 per year, but Congress can set a lower ceiling. Students apply using a need analysis form or a form submitted directly to the federal government.

BEOG. See Basic Educational Opportunity Grant Program.

Campus-based programs. The three federally funded student financial aid programs that are directly administered by colleges—Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants Program, National Direct Student Loan Program, and College Work-Study Program.

Candidates Reply Date Agreement. A college subscribing to this agreement will not require any applicant offered admission as a freshman to notify it of his or her decision to attend (or to accept an offer of financial aid) before May 1. The purpose of the Agreement is to give applicants time to hear from all the colleges they have applied to before they have to make a commitment to any one of them.

Certificate. An award for completing a particular program or course of study, sometimes given by two-year colleges or vocational or technical schools.

CLEP. See College-Level Examination Program.

College-Level Examination Program (CLEP). A service of the College Board that provides examinations in undergraduate college subjects and courses so that students and other adults may show college-level achievement for which they have not previously received college credit. The examinations are used by colleges to evaluate the status of adult applicants who have not attended college (or have not done so recently), students transferring from other colleges, and entering freshmen. They are also used by businesses, industries, government agencies, and professional groups to satisfy education requirements for advancement, licensing, admission to further training, and other purposes.

College Scholarship Service (CSS). A service of the College Board that assists postsecondary institutions, the federal government, state scholarship programs, and other organizations in the equitable distribution of student financial aid funds. By measuring a family's financial strength and analyzing its ability to contribute to college costs, CSS need analysis services offer a standardized method of determining a student's need. See also Financial Aid Form.

College Work-Study Program (CWSP). A federally sponsored program that provides jobs for students with demonstrated financial need. Students typically work ten to fifteen hours a week during the academic year (and more during vacation periods), and are paid at least the federal minimum wage. Students employed through CWSP may work for colleges as well as public and private nonprofit organizations.

Cooperative education. A college program in which a student alternates between semesters (or other periods) of full-time study and full-time employment in related work.

Students are paid for their work at the prevailing rate. Typically, five years are required to complete a bachelor's degree program, but graduates have the advantage of having completed about a year's practical experience in addition to their studies. Also called work-study, cooperative education should not be confused with the federally sponsored College Work-Study Program.

Credit by examination. Academic credit granted by a college for a student's having demonstrated proficiency in a subject as measured by an examination. See Advanced Placement and College-Level Examination Program.

CSS. See College Scholarship Service.

CWSP. See College Work-Study Program.

Dependent student. A student dependent on his or her parents for financial support. For financial aid purposes, a student is classified as dependent unless the strict definition of independent or self-supporting status is met in all respects. See Self-supporting student.

Early decision. Early decision admission plans are offered for applicants who are sure of the college they want to attend and are likely to be accepted by that college. An early decision admission application is initiated by the student, who is then notified of the college's decision earlier than usual—generally by December 15 of the senior year.

Early Decision Plan. Colleges that subscribe to this plan, which is sponsored by the College Board, agree to follow a common schedule for early decision admission applicants. Colleges may offer either a single-choice plan or a first-choice plan. A student applying under a first-choice plan must withdraw applications from all other colleges as soon as he or she is notified of acceptance by the first-choice college. A student applying under a single-choice plan may not apply to any colleges other than his or her first choice unless rejected by that institution. If a college follows the College Board Early Decision Plan, applications (including financial aid applications) must be received by a specified date no later than November 15, and the college agrees to notify the applicant by a specified date no later than December 15.

Expense budget. See Student expense budget.

FAF. See Financial Aid Form.

Family contribution. The total amount a student and his or her family are expected to pay toward college costs from their income and assets. The amount is derived from need analysis of the family's overall financial situation. Generally, students are eligible for financial aid equal to their financial need. See Need analysis.

Family Financial Statement (FFS). A financial information collection document of the American College Testing Program's Financial Aid Services, used by parents of dependent students or by independent students to supply information about their income, assets, expenses, and liabilities. The ACT Program uses this information in estimating how much money a family is able to contribute toward a student's college expenses.

FFS. See Family Financial Statement.

Financial aid award letter. A notice from a college or other financial aid sponsor that tells a student how much aid is being offered. The award letter also usually explains how a student's financial need was determined, describes the contents of the financial aid package, and outlines any conditions attached to the award. See also Financial aid package and Need analysis.

Financial Aid Form (FAF). A financial information collection document of the College Scholarship Service, used by parents of dependent students or by independent students to supply information about their income, assets, expenses, and liabilities. The CSS uses this information in estimating how much money a family is able to contribute toward a student's college expenses.

Financial aid package. The total financial aid award received by a student. It may be made up of a combination or "package" of aid that includes both gift aid and self-help. Many colleges try to meet a student's full financial need, but availability of funds, institutional aid policies, and the number of students needing assistance all influence the composition of a financial aid package. See also Gift aid, Self-help, and Need analysis.

Financial need. The amount by which a student's family contribution falls short of covering the student expense budget. Generally, students are eligible for financial aid equal to their financial need. See Family contribution and Student expense budget.

Gift aid. Student financial aid, such as scholarships and grants, that does not have to be repaid and that does not require a student's being employed. See also Self-help.

Guaranteed Student Loan Program (GSL). A federal program that lets students borrow money for education expenses directly from banks and other lending institutions (sometimes the colleges themselves). Students may borrow up to $2,500 an academic year and up to $7,500 for the total undergraduate program. The federal government pays the interest while the student is in college. Repayment terms are favorable and repayment need not begin until completion of the student's education.

Independent student. See Self-supporting student.

National Direct Student Loan Program (NDSL). A federally funded program that provides loans of up to $2,500 for the first two undergraduate years and up to $5,000 for the total undergraduate program. Repayment need not begin until completion of the student's education or limited periods of service in the military, Peace Corps, or VISTA. Repayment terms are favorable, and repayment may be partially or wholly waived for certain kinds of employment.

NDSL. See National Direct Student Loan Program.

Need analysis. The method for determining how much a family can reasonably be expected to pay toward a student's college education costs. Need analysis is based on the assumption that parents and students have the major responsibility for paying college costs to the extent that they are able. Formulas used in need analysis are updated annually to reflect changes in the economy, and are approved by the federal government and most colleges and other organizations that award financial aid.

Need analysis form. A form used by students to apply for financial aid. In many cases a need analysis form is the only form that students need to submit to be considered for all types of financial aid—institutional, state, and federal (including the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant Program). The principal need analysis forms are the College Scholarship Service's Financial Aid Form and the American College Testing Program's Family Financial Statement. See Financial Aid Form and Family Financial Statement.

Need analysis report. A report sent to colleges and programs as a result of a student's having submitted a need analysis form as a part of applying for financial aid. The need analysis report contains a preliminary estimate of the student's family contribution and financial need. See Need analysis form, Family contribution, and Financial need.

Open admission. The college admissions policy of admitting high school graduates and other adults generally without regard to conventional academic qualifications, such as high school subjects, high school grades, and admissions test scores. Virtually all applicants are accepted.

Parents' contribution. The amount a student's parents are expected to pay toward college costs from their income and assets. The amount is derived from need analysis of the parents' overall financial situation. The parents' contribution and the student's contribution together constitute the total family contribution, which, subtracted from the student expense budget, equals financial need. Generally students are eligible for financial aid equal to their financial need. See Need analysis.

Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test/National Merit Scholarship Qualifying Test (PSAT/NMSQT). A shorter version of the College Board's Scholastic Aptitude Test administered by high schools each year in October. The PSAT/NMSQT aids high schools in the early guidance of students planning for college and serves as the qualifying test for scholarships awarded by the National Merit Scholarship Corporation.

Quarter. An academic calendar period of about 11 weeks. Four quarters make up an academic year. At Colleges using the quarter calendar, students make normal progress by attending three quarters each year. In some colleges students can accelerate their programs by attending all four quarters in one or more years. See also Semester.

Reserve Officers' Training Corps (ROTC). Reserve Officers' Training Corps programs conducted by certain colleges in cooperation with the United States Air Force, Army, and Navy. Local recruiting offices of the services themselves can supply detailed information about these programs, as can participating colleges.

ROTC. See Reserve Officers' Training Corps.

SAT. See Scholastic Aptitude Test.

Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT). The College Board's test of verbal and mathematical reasoning abilities, given on specified dates throughout the year at test centers in the United States and other countries. It includes the Test of Standard Written English whose questions evaluate the ability to recognize standard written English, the language of most textbooks. Required of substantially all applicants by many colleges and sponsors of financial aid programs.

SEI. See Student Eligibility Index.

Self-help. Student financial aid, such as loans and jobs, that requires repayment or a student's being employed. See also Gift aid.

Self-supporting student. For financial aid purposes, a student who is independent of support from his or her parents. The definition set forth by the federal government for students applying for aid in 1981-82 is that, for the years 1980 and 1981, an applicant (1) must not live with parents more than six weeks a year; (2) must not be listed by parents as a federal income tax exemption; and (3) must not receive more than $1,000 in parental support. Certain students, such as wards of the court, wards of the state, and students whose parents are dead, are automatically categorized as self-supporting. See also Dependent student.

Semester. A period of about 17 or 18 weeks which makes up half of the usual academic year in colleges using this kind of calendar. See also Quarter.

SEOG. See Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant Program.

SER. See Student Eligibility Report.

Student Eligibility Index (SEI). A number calculated by the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant Program that indicates whether a student applicant is eligible for a grant. The lower the index, the greater is the student's eligibility for a grant. See Student Eligibility Report and Basic Educational Opportunity Grant Program.

Student Eligibility Report (SER). A report prepared by the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant Program and sent to student applicants. The SER contains the Student Eligibility Index. A copy of the SER must be submitted to the college that the student attends in order for him or her to receive payment of a Basic Grant. See Student Eligibility Index and Basic Educational Opportunity Grant Program.

Student expense budget. The annual cost of attending college that is used in determining a student's financial need. Student expense budgets usually include tuition and fees, books and supplies, room and board, personal expenses, and transportation. Sometimes additional expenses are included for students with special education needs, students who have a handicap, or students who are married or have children.

Student's contribution. The amount students are expected to pay toward college costs from their income, assets, and benefits. The amount is derived from need analysis of the student's resources. The student's contribution and parents' contribution constitute the total family contribution, which, subtracted from the student expense budget, equals financial need. Generally, students are eligible for financial aid equal to their financial need. See Need analysis.

Summer savings. The amount from a student's summer employment that a college assumes the student can apply toward college costs. Freshman students are usually expected to have $700 in summer savings. Adjustments are sometimes made if students are unable to find employment or if they are required to use their income to help support their families.

Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant Program (SEOG). A federal program administered by colleges that provides assistance for undergraduate students on the basis of need. Grants range from $200 to $1,500 a year and do not exceed a total of $4,000 for four years. The amount of each grant may not exceed 50 percent of a student's total need. Students must apply to the financial aid office of the college they plan to attend.

Work-study. See College Work-Study Program and Cooperative education.

Appendix: Student Expenses at Postsecondary Institutions

Introduction

THIS appendix provides detailed information about expenses at over 3,200 colleges, universities, and proprietary schools. The data were collected from institutions on questionnaires sent to colleges and universities in November 1979 and to proprietary schools in January 1980. The listings include all institutions submitting data by April 15, 1980.

Student expense budget information

In an effort to collect comparable budget information, the College Board asked institutions to provide data for specifically defined budget items. The figures supplied under each column heading, therefore, should represent the following.

Column 1. Tuition and fees

This figure indicates the tuition and general fees an institution charges all first-year, full-time students based on a nine-month academic year. For some proprietary institutions in which an academic year of other than nine months is used, the expense figures given are for the normal duration of the course of study.

Column 2. Books and supplies

This figure is the average cost of books and supplies for the course load described under "Tuition and fees."

Two figures may be shown in each of the columns 3, 4, 5, and 6. Figures without parentheses are for resident students; figures in parentheses are for commuter students.

Column 3. Room and board

For resident students, room and board includes the nine-month charges for living and eating in facilities operated by or for the institution. For commuter students, the figures in parentheses include food and other at-home miscellaneous expenses for nine months, but exclude the cost of room.

Column 4. Transportation

For resident students, the figures include typical costs for two round trips from home. For commuter students, the figures in parentheses reflect the typical cost of regular transportation to and from the institution during the nine-month period.

Column 5. Other expenses

This column shows typical expenditures for personal or miscellaneous expenses, such as clothing, laundry, entertainment, incidental meals, medical insurance, and furnishings, as applicable.

Column 6. Total student budget

The figures in this column show the total of the entries for columns 1 through 5. Generally, each budget total includes tuition and fees, books and supplies, room and board, transportation, and other expenses. However, if an institution did not supply figures for all five components, a total is still given if figures were provided for the first two components and at least one of the last three components.

Column 7. Additional out-of-state/out-of-district tuition

This item represents only the additional charge made to students who do not meet state or district residence requirements. The figure to the left of the diagonal mark shows additional out-of-state charges; the figure to the right of the diagonal mark shows additional out-of-district charges.

Need analysis requirements

The last two columns in the tabular listings provide information about the need analysis documents required by institutions and the date by which the institutions prefer that you submit the documents.

Column 8. Need analysis document required

The need analysis document required by an institution is listed. The following abbreviations are used.

FAF—the Financial Aid Form of the College Scholarship Service

FAF® —the Financial Aid Form and FAF Supplement of the College Scholarship Service

FFS—the Family Financial Statement of the American College Testing Program

SAAC—the Student Aid Application for California (Because the SAAC is comparable to the FAF, California residents should note that the SAAC is generally acceptable in lieu of the FAF.)

SER—the Student Eligibility Report from the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant Program (You can obtain an SER by filing the FAF, FFS, PHEAA, SAAC, or the Basic Grant Program's own Application Form.)

PHEAA—the application form of the Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency

CFS—the Confidential Financial Statement of the Financial Analysis Service

IRS Form 1040—a copy of your parents' (or your) federal income tax return

ISSC—the application form of the Illinois State Scholarship Commission

The following information provides some guidelines for interpreting document requirements.

- Institutions were asked to list only general requirements for need analysis documents. Some institutions will accept a document not listed if you submit it.

- When more than one document is listed for an institution this means that either (or any) of the documents is acceptable. If an institution prefers one document over another, this is indicated by an asterisk (*) following the document's abbreviation.
- The Basic Grant Student Eligibility Report (SER) is listed only for those institutions for which it is, by itself, a sufficient need analysis document. Most institutions require you to apply for a Basic Grant, but they generally have other need analysis document requirements as well.
- In general, state-specific forms are not listed unless they are the only need analysis document required by an institution. Most institutions require you to apply for your state scholarship or grant program, but typically have additional need analysis requirements as well.
- The IRS Form 1040 is listed only for those institutions for which the federal income tax return, by itself, is a sufficient need analysis document. Many institutions require your parents (or you) to submit a copy of the tax return to verify income and family status information, but require a need analysis document as well.

Column 9. Preferred submission date

The last column gives the date by which an institution prefers that you submit your need analysis form for processing. The date listed is intended to ensure adequate time for processing by the agency to which you send your form and for institutional review and award decisions to be made. It should not be interpreted as a deadline for institutional financial aid applications. Many postsecondary institutions review need analysis forms filed after the preferred submission date. Specific information about application procedures and deadlines should be obtained from the financial aid administrator at each institution to which you are applying.

Need money for college?

The College Cost Book, 1980-81 shows how you may be eligible for financial aid.

Published for the first time, this step-by-step guide is designed to help students and their families plan for meeting college costs. Using simple charts and worksheets, the Cost Book

- explains how to estimate college costs and financial need
- tells what types of aid are available to meet that need
- shows how to apply to federal, state, local, and private agencies that administer financial aid
- incorporates the College Board's annual report, Student Expenses at Postsecondary Institutions, listing costs for 1980-81 at more than 3,200 two- and four-year public, private, and proprietary institutions.
- provides suggestions on application procedures for self-supporting or handicapped students and for students whose parents are divorced, separated, or deceased

In addition, the Cost Book contains sample financial aid forms, a bibliography of aid sources, a glossary of educational terms, and a financial aid application checklist.
